Household Hints

Idle riding boots need boot trees—or a reasonably accurate facsimile—to keep the calf of the boot from getting out of shape. Make your own facsimile by rolling up three or four sections of newspaper; then jam the roll down into the boot leg. Shoe trees in the foot of the boot should be used, too.

When shoe polish gets hard and dry, you can soften it up by pouring a few drops of turpentine in it.

Instead of tying the two ends of a broken shoelace together to make it do until you can get a new one, take a little extra time to lap the broken ends over each other and sew them together. A "fix" like that will last longer and look better than a knot.

You can brush out the cuffs on men's trousers easily if you take out the stitches holding the cuff and replace them with metal snaps. From then on, unsnap the snaps, brush, then snap the snaps.

If a pair of new shoes feel as though they're going to rub blisters on your heels, beat them to the punch by putting strips of adhesive tape on your heels before the blisters arise, instead of after. That should keep them from arising at all.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Carey March is beginning to realize a growing affection for Ken. She feels a sudden upsurge of the heart when she sees Ken again as she and her uncle, Beaver Greenway, join Ken and his dad, Rob, and brother, Howard, at Westgate to begin the search for the filly, Crown Jewel, who has been added to his herd by Thunderhead, Ken's banished stallion. Carey's grandmother forbids Carey going out with Ken that night, but Ken wangles from Carey an admission that she "likes" him. As the searching party plans progress, the sheriff raises a point about Crown Jewel's ownership, since she bears no brand and can't be identified that way.

CHAPTER XVIII

The work of cutting the timber and building the forty-by-forty-foot corral went on quickly and quietly. No hammers or nails were used. Posthole diggers made the holes for the uprights, the long poles were fastened against them by bailing wire.

And then the wings, wings a hundred feet long, seven feet high.

"I should think," said Greenway as he and Rob rode slowly along the mountain side above the corral, "that six-foot wings and fences would have been high enough."

"Six-foot fences would have been high enough for the mares," said Rob, "there won't be any trouble with them at all. They've all been handled, they'd trot right into a corral and look for oats. Unless he has picked up some wild mares as well. Buck was saying he thought there were some wild mares in the bunch—but Thunderhead is the only one there will be trouble with, and if he really wanted to get over a six-foot fence, he'd manage it somehow."

Greenway whistled. "Six feet! Great Scott! Why, no corral or pasture will hold him!"

"That's the devil of it."

"What are you going to do with him when he's caught?"

Rob laughed. "Theme song! What to do with Thunderhead! You wouldn't like to buy him, would you?"

"Rob, I want to ask you something."

"Shoot."

"I'd like to take Ken back with me to the Blue Moon for a visit of a few weeks—or as long as you can spare him."

Rob said doubtfully, "That's certainly very kind of you—"

"Not kind at all—purely selfish. Carey and he are great pals—have you noticed them together?"

Rob turned to face him and both men burst into a laugh. "I sure have!"

"Well, that young child of mine doesn't have enough companionship with young people her own age. She's had the time of her life with you and your wife and your boys this summer and it's been good for her and I want it to go on."

Greenway Puts Foot Down for Own Ideas

Rob asked, "How will your sister feel about this?"

Rob was looking at him, waiting for him to answer. Greenway cleared his throat with a little embarrassment. "In a matter like this, it's my say-so. But I don't mind telling you, Rob, that I'm quite worried about the way my sister has got Carey under her thumb. She's a very imperious woman. She won't have anything to do with anyone she can't rule. Except me. The way I've managed, I live my own life, keep out of her way, kid her a little bit, let her do as she wants. But when it comes to Carey—it's a—" He hesitated.

"Well," said Rob slowly, "I've noticed a good deal of that. Is she really ill?"

"I wish I knew. She has a doctor come to see her at home, a tame cat. In my opinion she makes her own diagnosis, tells him what's the matter with her, what she ought to eat, do, how people ought to treat her, then pulls that on Carey and me and anyone she wants to rule. He falls for it. She turns on her charm—she's got charm, you know."

"Yes, and knows how to use it," said Rob. "But surely, when it comes to Carey, you can do what you think best?"

"It's not so easy. I haven't interfered much so far because Carey is so young and, by and large, has been happy and well. But I admit I have often had a sinking sensation when I thought about what would happen when the time comes for the girl to marry."

"You'd better look out or Carey will never marry. Many a time, a character like your sister's made an old maid of a girl."

"I know it. She did her best to prevent her daughter's marriage, and she'll do her best to prevent Carey's."

"That accounts for the way she looks at Ken. As if she would like to poison him."

Greenway laughed. "Yes, he's the enemy right now. But it's more than that. Carey's growing up. Her life is opening out. And she feels Carey escaping her."

He said, "You look out, or she'll ruin your little girl's life."

"No," said Greenway, "I shan't give in to her. The thing that will do it is to send Carey away to college. Meanwhile, let me have Ken. There's another reason I want him, Rob."

"Yes?"

"He did a wonderful job training his stallion."

"Yes, I can say that for him."

"Well, Jewel is going to need a lot of training and I'd like your boy to do it."

"Jewel will be in good condition. This life on the range puts them into top form."

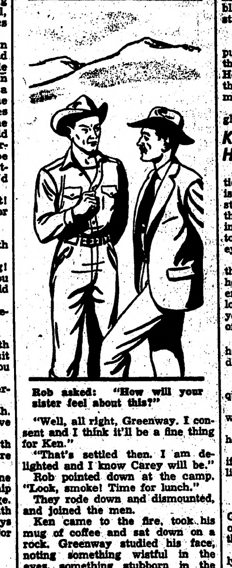
"She may have a foal."

"Even so, she won't be soft. I'll wager she'll be in racing form by October or November."

Ken Suggested As Jewel Trainer

"All the same, she'll need training and Ken's the one to do it."

Rob did not answer. As between having the gelding done with Ken looking on, or away at blue Moon. Then, when Ken returned he would be presented with a fait accompli.



Rob asked: "How will your sister feel about this?"

"Well, all right, Greenway. I consent and I think it'll be a fine thing for Ken."

"That's settled then. I am delighted and I know Carey will be."

They rode down and dismounted, and joined the men.

Ken came to the fire, took his mug of coffee and sat down on a rock. Greenway studied his face, noting something wistful in the eyes, something stubborn in the mouth— all of it very sensitive, quick, and handsome. Gad! no wonder Carey—

"Ken," he said, "your Dad and I've been cooking up a plan that concerns you."

Ken looked up, "You have, sir?"

"Yes. I'm looking for someone to train Jewel for me. How'd you like to come to the Blue Moon with me and put some good work on that filly?"

"You mean right now?" Ken's face flushed clear to the top of his brow. He was thinking, Carey! Carey—

"Yes. As soon as we've caught her."

"Why, gosh! Mr. Greenway, that'd be keen—" His eyes swung over to his father. "Did Dad say I could?"

"Certainly. I think it would be a nice visit for you."

"What's going to be done with Thunderhead?"

Rob was silent. Every man present was willing to contribute suggestions. No one had as yet had a good look at either Thunderhead or the filly. The sides of the ravine were timbered nearly to the top. To reach the corral site the men rode out on an old timber trail along the outer side of the ridge. And Rob had given orders that no one was to go close to the horses.

Ken answered in the negative. "I don't want him gelded," he said.

"A lad of one idea," said Rob sarcastically.

Ken looked stubborn.

"Why Ken, gelden' won't hurt him none," said Tim.

"It might kill him," said Ken.

"Could happen, but ain't likely."

"Besides," said Ken, "he would never be the same again."

"Ken means," said Rob in the same mocking manner, "that he would never be the great Thunderhead, any more!"

"What I tell him," said Rob, "is that, whether or no he wants Thunderhead gelded, it's going to be done, either by a good veterinarian with clean instruments or by a rusty old pocket knife in the hands of some enraged rancher."

"Better let me have him, Captain," said the persistent Ross as he tended the fire, "don't take any o' that ginger outen him."

Ken's face was pale and set. Here it was. The same jam he had been in after Thunderhead lost the race at Saginaw Falls, only now he couldn't say that there was a valley in which he could lock the stallion up and keep him out of trouble.

As they rode along the lumber trail Ken said, "Mr. Greenway, I'm awful sorry, but I don't think I can go up there with you to the Blue Moon."

"Why not, Ken?"

"Well, because of Thunderhead. You see, we haven't really decided what to do with him, and I'd be afraid to leave him with anybody else."

Greenway pulled up his horse, Ken turned to face him and they looked into each other's eyes. "I'll be dammed," thought Greenway, "he believes his father is going to geld the horse the minute his back is turned."

"Don't know as I blame him," muttered Greenway. "But I don't blame the kid either. He'd better stick tight."

"What did you say, sir?"

"Just thinking out loud." He pulled up his horse again and slung the field glasses off his shoulder. He aimed them at the bottom, and through them could see the horses moving in the underbrush.

"Want a look?" he handed the glasses to Ken.

Ken Sick as Rob Hints Stallion Fate

Suddenly there was an exclamation from Ken. "Oh, gosh! There he is!" He dropped the glasses and strained his naked eyes and saw the whiteness of the stallion crossing a patch of green. Mr. Greenway took the glasses, put them to his eyes, and had a glimpse.

"Well, there he is," he said, as they moved on again. "And little he knows that he has come to the end of his career of crime." He looked, smiling, at Ken. "Gives you a big thrill, I guess, at the idea of having him again?"

Ken's face was all lit up. "And how!" He kept turning in his saddle to look back.

"Ken, I'd like to help you out."

"Suppose we take Thunderhead with us to the Blue Moon?"

Ken's face went blank. He thought hard.

"You see, I want you to come and if I can't get you without the stallion—"

"Gosh, Mr. Greenway!"

"Well, will you come?"

"Will I come! You bet I will! Mr. Greenway, I'm ever so much obliged. You don't know what a fix this gets me out of."

Mr. Greenway was saying calmly, "We'll locate a double trailer and put Thunderhead and Jewel in it together. They ought to be good friends after this year spent together."

One morning—it was the day on which the corral and wings were to be finished—Carey came down to the hotel dining-room in a dress instead of riding clothes. She explained to her uncle that she would not able to go out to the camp with them, because her grandmother was staying in bed and she had to bring her meals up. Carey was downcast for tomorrow was the round-up.

Without a word, Mr. Greenway rose from the breakfast table and went upstairs. He found his sister sitting up against pillows, a thin silk bed jacket over her shoulders and a copy of the Westgate Weekly Sentinel in her hands.

He drew up a chair beside the bed and took hold of her wrist at which she put her paper aside and looked at him in astonishment. He said gravely, "What is the matter with you, Caroline?"

"I am feeling very badly," she answered with hauteur.

"You need some castor oil, about five ounces."

"Don't be vulgar, Beaver."

"Well, what is it then?"

"My heart has been jumping and fluttering and I have dizzy spells. This intense heat is very bad for me."

"I believe there is a good doctor in Westgate, I'll try to look him up and send him in to see you. Perhaps we had better postpone our departure tomorrow?"

"We are leaving tomorrow?"

"The work is practically finished. We will drive the horses into the corral early tomorrow morning. Then there is nothing to keep us. We can leave immediately."

"I shall be very glad to leave this place." She sank back weakly against her pillows. "You don't know what it is like to be ill and alone in a strange place. Carey has been constantly away from me."

"For the last few days she has, because I insisted on it. But I do not want you to be left without attention if you are ill. That is why I spoke of getting the doctor. Or a nurse."

"I do not need a nurse. There is nothing that Carey cannot do."

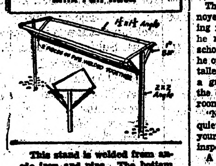
USDA Recommends DDT For Termite Control

The U.S. department of agriculture has come up with the answer for one of the farmers' serious problems—termites.

The USDA says a single treatment of DDT will prevent termites from attacking woodwork for at least five years and anyone can apply the treatment. Here's the mixture to use: 5 per cent DDT in No. 2 fuel oil. It will give wooden structures complete protection from termites.

Entomologists suggest digging a trench along the building's foundation—about 30 inches deep and about the width of a spade. Then the earth should be saturated at the bottom with the DDT preparation. The soil which is used to fill up the trench also should be saturated. Apply the treatment at the rate of one quart per cubic foot of soil.

Milk Pail Rack



This stand is welded from angle iron and pipe. The bottom support shown here is made from two pieces of ¾" pipe welded together with a slight space between them. This permits water to drain off. The stand can be mounted directly in the earth or it can be grouted in cement.

Record Cranberry Crop Forecast for Wisconsin

A record production of 969,000 barrels of cranberries is forecast this fall, agricultural department officials report. The prospect is 15 per cent above the previous record of 967,700 barrels in 1948.

"Bully" News

A cub reporter rushed back from the livestock show he had been assigned to cover.

"I've got the perfect news story," he told the city editor.

"Man, calm down," said the editor. "What happened?"

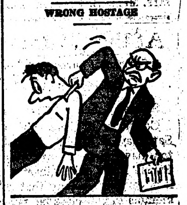
WRONG HOSTAGE



The inspector was extremely annoyed by the amount of noise coming from the adjoining room while he made his usual rounds of the school. Unable to stand it longer, he opened the door. Seeing one boy taller than the others and talking a great deal, he grabbed him by the collar, dragged him to another room and stood him in the corner.

"Now you stand there and be quiet till I tell you to go back to your room!" the exasperated school inspector commanded.

"Please, sir, may we have our teacher back now?"

There is nothing small about the political machinery needed to carry out proposals before Congress for Socialized Medicine. It is estimated that at least 150,000 new government employees —entirely aside from doctors and nurses—would be required to administer such a plan. Your medical care becomes a commodity, regulated from the desks of distant government officials. Red tape flourishes. And, as always when Socialism takes over, the public pays a cruel price in taxes and in loss of high-quality service. For Socialism, no matter how you try it, slows down progress because it takes away from every citizen the incentive and the ability to do his best possible work.

Ratio of Elders Doubles in Century

The ratio of elders to those at the main working years of life has doubled in the United States during the past century, and has increased by nearly two thirds since 1900.

One hundred years ago there were only about six persons at age 65 or older for each 100 of the population at 20 to 64. By 1900 the ratio had climbed to eight, and since then it has risen even more rapidly and is now 13.

Although the segment of the population at 65 or over has been increasing, the relative importance of the dependent population as a whole has declined, due to a rapid drop in the ratio of children to the population at the main productive ages. The number of children under 18 per 100 persons at ages 20-64 has been cut in half, from 107 in 1850 to about 54 in 1950.

In very recent years, however, due to the war and postwar spurt in the birth rate, this trend has been reversed and the child population has increased at a more rapid rate than people at ages 20-64. This will continue for at least a decade, even if allowance is made for a steady decline in the birth rate from its present level, and at the same time the population at the older ages will continue its long-term upward climb.

As a result, we are entering a period when the country will have to provide for the expanding social and economic needs of both its large child and aged populations, each growing at a faster rate than the population at the main working ages.

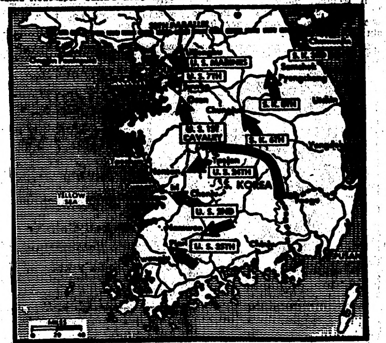
Korean Unification Big Question In General Assembly Discussions; Defense Gets Resources Priority

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



After three months and two weeks the war in South Korea was virtually over, with only small pockets of resisting Communists to be eliminated. The above map shows how United Nations forces broke out of the Pusan beachhead and linked up with troops landed at Inchon. Communists not trapped in the quick advance fled north of the 38th parallel.

KOREA:

What's the Next Move?

Three months and two weeks after Communist forces from North Korea plunged south of the 38th parallel in an attempt to conquer the republic of South Korea, United Nations forces won a victory in the south, destroyed a large part of the invading army, and advanced to that imaginary line dividing north and south Korea.

And although South Korean troops crossed the 38th parallel, U. N. forces sat on their heels awaiting word from the general assembly of what to do next. The assembly was faced with a question it was reluctant to answer: Should U. N. forces go beyond the 38th parallel?

Those who favored crossing the parallel argued that failure to do so would mean a hollow victory for the U. N. The enemy would be saved from the knockout punch. He would be able to regroup his forces, await the time for another invasion attempt. At the very least, the Communists, safe behind their parallel, would be able to keep the country divided. Thus, occupation of North Korea is necessary if the assembly is ever to fulfill its aim—unification of the country under a democratically chosen government.

Those against the crossing argued that a U. N. military campaign to take North Korea might be regarded by Moscow and Peiking as a provocation—a reason for marching south. That might mean the war. Even if the dreaded intervention did not materialize, military operations by General MacArthur in North Korea would have a bad effect in the Orient. It would be interpreted by many Asians, with deep-rooted suspicions of western intentions, as another example of white imperialism.

Added to the confusion was the roar of Red China, threatening to send troops into North Korea if U. N. forces advanced north of the 38th parallel. Many observers pointed out, however, that Red invasion of Korea would offer the Nationalist the opportunity to invade south China.

Appointment

Headliners

". . . . I am certain that with time and patience, and with devotion and sacrifice on the part of the free nations, the United Nations will steadily grow in strength and capacity to fulfill its central function, the preservation of international peace and security," former Secretary of State Cordell Hull said in a statement released on his 79th birthday.

"The roots of Communist aggression cannot be left to grow again into a poisonous tree," a voice of America program beamed to North Korea said.

". . . . The aggressor's forces should not be permitted to have refuge behind an imaginary line because that would recreate the threat to the peace of Korea and of the world," Warren R. Austin, U. S. delegate to the United Nations, said in a speech before the general assembly.

DEFENSE:

Military Gets First Call

In the first sweeping priorities regulation issued by the national production administration, the government gave the atomic energy commission and the military first call on the nation's factories and raw materials to assure success of the rearmament program.

The order required producers to put military orders ahead of everything else—even if civilian production such as automobiles and refrigerators must be shunted aside.

Effective immediately, the order covers most of the goods and materials the military will need for rearmament. It does not, however, cover electric power, farm equipment, fuels, gas, petroleum, and transportation.

In excuting the order, the defense department, or the atomic energy commission, will put a D.O. (defense order) priority rating on war contracts with a business firm. This means the company must give first attention to fulfilling the contract, whether or not it wants to.

The firm with the priority contract has the right to extend its priority to other concerns from which it must get parts or materials to fulfill his contract. This puts the war contractor in the position of requisitioning anything he needs, with the government back of his authority.

The automobile industry was the first to comment on the order. A spokesman for General Motors said a cut of 10 to 15 per cent in truck and car production may take place within the next 12 months.

Already hampered by a shortage of certain materials, the spokesman said "now that much scarce materials will be diverted to the rearmament program, there's nothing we can do but plan ahead for a drastic cut in production of civilian goods."

"We'll feel the worst of it in about a year," he said.

Tiny Snake Scares Ape Back Into Cage

Bushman, a 550-pound gorilla, the main attraction for years at Chicago's Lincoln park zoo, roamed through the monkey house for two hours before he was frightened back into his cage by a small garter snake.

The gorilla walked out of his cage when an attendant left the door unlocked, but before he could escape from the monkey building doors and windows of the house were barricaded.

Edgar Robinson, who had tended the gorilla since he was a baby was the only casualty during the two hours that Bushman was free. Bushman bit him on the arm. Finally baby alligators and a garter snake, which the beast dreaded, were used to chase him back into his cage where he had lived for 20 years.

Report to the People

by Gov. Luther Youngdahl

One of the striking developments which affects communities everywhere in our state has been the pressure for increased state aids. Finding it difficult to get enough funds for their local services, officials and citizens of many communities quite understandably have tried from year to year to get larger contributions from the state toward the costs of local government. The state has larger resources, it is contended, and has access to sources of revenue not open to the local governments.

An increasing stream of money is being paid out by the state as a consequence to augment the funds of local governments. A tabulation just prepared by Tax Commissioner Spaeth's office shows the extent to which this assistance has grown. In the last ten years, state aids and state taxes shared with local units of government have increased from $34,000,000 to $63,000,000 a year, the study shows. Back in 1925, it was only $12,000,000.

HOW MUCH STATE HELPS

Fully 35% of the taxes which the state has been collecting in the last ten years has gone to local units of government. The state has paid thru its aids and shared taxes in this period approximately 25% of the cost of local governments on the average.

You can see, therefore, what a big contribution the state aids and shared taxes are making toward the cost of local government. And the tendency will grow, many believe, until provision is made for additional sources of revenue which will enable the local communities to raise increased funds for their public services when needed without placing too much additional burden on property.

BETTER THAN EXPECTED

I have just had some good news. Our Commissioner of Administration, Earl Berg, reports that the net balance in the general revenue fund on June 30th of this year was $21,100,000 and that the estimated balance at the end of the biennium next June, on the basis of presently expected receipts and expenditures, will be $13,600,000. This is about $13,000,000 better than we expected when we were wrestling with appropriations and revenue estimates during the Legislative session. Returns from the special taxes that are affected by the volume of business have held up better than anticipated. What will happen to change the state's financial picture as a result of possible war needs still is problematical.

NEIGHBORS PAY TRIBUTE

I was pleased to attend the farm picnic held at Rochester Sunday by Myron Clark's farm neighbors in Olmsted county in recognition of his appointment as state commissioner of agriculture. It was a great pleasure to me to take a man off the farm for this important job and know that by training, ability and experience he was so well equipped to do an outstanding job as commissioner. Seeing how well Myron is regarded by his Olmsted county neighbors reinforced my conclusions. Incidentally, did you notice that Mrs. Myron Clark, wife of the new commissioner, won first prize for the best loaf of white bread and first prize in three divisions of baking at the State Fair? No wonder Myron gets so much work done.

Douglas Fir

Lumber cut from the same tree or log of Douglas fir consists of several classes of grades suitable for a variety of purposes. The inner part of the log will usually be tight-knotted although coarse-grained, while finer-grained material is found toward the outer edges. In larger, older logs the tight-knotted center area may be surrounded with a layer of lumber with black or loose knots which eventually give way to a layer of clear wood.

"Fair Prices-Plus-For Dairymen"

That's what MILTON HRADSKY likes about LAND O'LAKES. Manager of the feed department at the Farmers Co-op Creamery at Brainerd, Mr. Hradsky is also a dairy farmer and one of the owner-patrons of this LAND O'LAKES member plant. So—from two angles—he knows what he's talking about. "Year-in and year-out, LAND O'LAKES pays the best average prices to its farmer-owners," he says. "Those dividends really count up. And farmers and their creameries know that by marketing through their own organization, everybody gets the same square deal." Are you in the dairy business as either a producer or plant manager? Then market through LAND O'LAKES. As dairymen testify, it pays.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of Minnesota

J. A. A. Burnquist
Attorney General
State Capitol
St. Paul, Minn.

June 2, 1950

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
St. Paul, Minnesota

Dear Sir:

Pursuant to Minnesota Statutes 1949, Section 3.21, there is transmitted to you herewith, in accordance with the requirements of said statutory provision, a statement of the purpose and effect of the proposed amendment to Article IX, Section 1 of the constitution of the State of Minnesota. The proposed amendment is to be submitted at the November 7, 1950, general election. This amendment was enacted by Laws 1949, Chapter 643.

This proposed amendment would add to Section 1 of Article IX of the constitution of the State of Minnesota an entire new section to be known as Section 1B, which new section would read as follows:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of Section 1A of Article 9 of the constitution, a portion of the proceeds of the occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced to be paid by every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, equal to the proceeds of a tax of one per cent on such valuation levied in the manner provided by law, shall be paid into the veterans compensation fund before the remaining funds derived from the occupation tax are apportioned as provided by Section 1A of Article 9 of the constitution.

"This amendment when approved by the people and proclaimed, all as provided by law, shall be effective as of the first day of January, 1949. In the event that the provisions of the preceding sentence shall be held to contravene the constitution of the United States of America, the remaining provisions of this section shall stand as valid and continue in full force and effect.

"This section of the constitution shall expire on December 31, 1958, except as to the proceeds of the occupation taxes theretofore levied and thereafter collected."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize, in order to help pay for the veterans adjusted compensation, the payment into the veterans compensation fund of a part of the occupation tax paid to the state by persons engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state. The amount of the part which it is proposed shall be paid into the veterans compensation fund shall be equal to the proceeds of an occupation tax of one per cent of the valuation as ascertained according to law of the ores mined or produced.

The effect of the amendment is to make available for payment of the veterans adjusted compensation paid to veterans of World War II the entire proceeds of an additional one per cent occupation tax paid pursuant to Laws 1949, Chapter 642, by persons engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state instead of one-half of the proceeds of the additional one per cent occupation tax which is now available for this purpose.

Very truly yours,
JAAB:mm J. A. A. BURNQUIST,
Attorney General

June 6, 1950

Honorable Mike Holm,
Secretary of State
CAPITOL.

Dear Mr. Holm:

Pursuant to Minnesota Statutes 1949, § 3.21, there is transmitted to you herewith, in accordance with the requirements of said statutory provision, a statement of the purpose and effect of the amendment proposed by L. 1949, c. 746.

The proposed amendment relates to the repeal of Article IV, Section 32 (b), of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota and the modification of Article VIII, Section 2, thereof, so as to provide the manner of the "disposition of the principal and interest from the net proceeds of the use, sale, or other disposition of all (state) lands."

The four present state funds involved in the consideration of the proposed amendment are known as the internal improvement fund, the school fund, the university fund, and the swamp land fund. Provision for the creation of an additional fund, to be known generally as the forestry revolving fund, is contained in the proposed amendment.

The internal improvement fund is now governed by the provisions of Article IV, Section 32 (b), of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota. This section, 32 (b), which would be repealed if the proposed amendment is adopted, reads as follows:

"All lands donated to the State of Minnesota for the purpose of internal improvement, under the eighth section of the act of Congress, approved September fourth, eighteen hundred and forty-one, being 'An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sale of the public lands, and to grant pre-emption rights,' shall be appraised and sold, in the same manner and by the same officers, and the minimum price shall be the same as is provided by law for the appraisement and sale of the school lands, under the provisions of title one (1), chapter thirty-eight, of the General Statutes, except the modifications hereinafter mentioned. All moneys derived from the sales of said lands shall be invested in the bonds of the United States, or of the State of Minnesota issued since 1860; and the moneys so invested shall constitute the Internal Improvement Land Fund of the State. All moneys received by the county treasurer under the provisions of title one (1), chapter thirty-eight (38), aforesaid, derived from the sale of internal improvement lands, shall be held at all times subject to the order and direction of the state treasurer, for the benefit of the fund to which it belongs; and on the fifteenth day of June in each year, and at such other times as he may be requested so to do by the state treasurer, he shall pay over to the said state treasurer all moneys received on account of such fund.

"The bonds purchased in accordance with this amendment shall be transferable only upon the order of the governor, and on each bond shall be written 'Minnesota Internal Improvement Land Fund of the State, transferable only on the order of the governor.'

"The principal sum from all sales of internal improvement lands shall not be reduced by any charges or costs of officers, by fees, or by any other means whatever; and section fifty (50), of title one (1) chapter thirty-eight (38), of the General Statutes, shall not be applicable to the provisions of this amendment, and wherever the words 'school lands' are used in said title, it shall read as applicable to this amendment, 'Internal Improvement Lands.'

"The moneys belonging to the internal Improvement Land Fund shall not be appropriated for any purpose whatever until the enactment for that purpose shall have been approved by a majority of the electors of the State voting at the annual general election following the passage of the act.

"The force of this amendment shall be to authorize the sale of the internal improvement lands, without further legislative enactment."

The present Article VIII, Section 2, of the Constitution relates to school land funds and swamp land funds. It provides:

"The proceeds of such lands as are or hereafter may be granted by the United States for the use of schools within each township of this State shall remain a perpetual school fund to the State; and not more than one-third (⅓) of said lands may be sold in two (2) years, one-third (⅓) in five (5) years, and one-third (⅓) in ten (10) years; but the lands of the greatest valuation shall be sold first; provided, that no portion of said lands shall be sold otherwise than at public sale. The principal of all funds arising from sales or other disposition of lands or other property, granted or entrusted to this State in each township for educational purposes, shall forever be preserved inviolate and undiminished; and the income arising from the lease or sale of said school land shall be distributed to the different townships throughout the State, in proportion to the number of scholars in each township, between the ages of five and twenty-one years; and shall be faithfully applied to the specific objects of the original grants or appropriations.

"A revolving fund of not over two hundred fifty thousand dollars ($250,000) may be set apart from the fund derived from the sale of school and swamp lands, to be used in constructing roads, ditches and fire breaks in, through and around unsold school and swamp lands and in clearing such lands, such fund to be replenished as long as needed from the enhanced value realized from the sale of such lands so benefited.

"Suitable laws shall be enacted by the legislature for the safe investment of the principal of all funds which have heretofore arisen or which may hereafter arise from the sale or other disposition of such lands, or the income from such lands accruing in any way before the sale or disposition thereof, in interest-bearing bonds of the United States, or of the State of Minnesota, issued after the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty (1860), or of such other state as the legislature may, by law, from time to time direct.

"All swamp lands now held by the State, or that may hereafter accrue to the State, shall be appraised and sold in the same manner and by the same officers, and the minimum price shall be the same, less one-third (⅓), as is provided by law for the appraisement and sale of the school lands under the provisions of title one (1) of chapter thirty-eight (38) of the General Statutes. The principal of all funds derived from sales of swamp lands, as aforesaid, shall forever be preserved inviolate and undiminished. One-half (½) of the proceeds of said principal shall be appropriated to the common school fund of the State. The remaining one-half (½) shall be appropriated to the educational and charitable institutions of the State in the relative ratio of cost to support said institutions."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate the present above referred to revolving fund provided for in said Article VIII, Section 2; to remove the present restrictions which would require entire proceeds of the sale of state trust lands to remain perpetual trust funds; to authorize the deduction of a reasonable cost of administration, conservation, and development from the proceeds of the use, sale, or other disposition of lands and provide that such proceeds less such deduction shall constitute "net proceeds"; to set aside as perpetual trust funds 75% of such net proceeds; to establish a new revolving fund to be known as the forestry revolving fund by paying into that fund 25% of such net proceeds; and to permit the cost of administration of the income from the principal to be deducted before the distribution of such income.

(1) Deductions from principal of reasonable cost of administration, conservation and development, and from income from principal, of cost of administration would be authorized.

(2) Seventy-five per cent of the net proceeds from the sale or other disposition of lands belonging to the four funds referred to, would remain as perpetual trust funds. The other twenty-five per cent of such net proceeds would be paid into a newly created forestry revolving fund. The principal therein and the interest therefrom would be used to promote a forestry management and production program and to rehabilitate cut-over timber areas in such manner as the legislature may provide.

(3) The principal of each of the four funds hereinbefore referred to could be invested in bonds of the United States, the State of Minnesota and its political subdivisions, and bonds of other states as may be provided by law.

(4) The income from investment of the principal in the funds hereinbefore referred to, after deducting the cost of administration would be apportioned as follows: From the school fund, to the public schools; from the university fund, to the University of Minnesota; from the swamp land fund, one-half to the public schools and one-half to the charitable and educational institutions of the state; and, from the internal improvement fund, as provided by law.

Very truly yours,
JAAB-sm J. A. A. BURNQUIST,
Attorney General

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
St. Paul, Minnesota

Dear Sir:

Pursuant to Minnesota Statutes 1949, Section 3.21, there is transmitted to you herewith, in accordance with the requirements of said statutory provision, a statement of the purpose and effect of the proposed amendment to Article IX, § 5 of the constitution of the State of Minnesota. The proposed amendment is to be submitted at the November 7, 1950, general election. This amendment was enacted by Laws 1949, Chapter 747.

In Article IX, Section 5 of the Minnesota constitution there is included a provision relating to the distribution of the proceeds of an excise tax on petroleum products which reads as follows:

"* * * and shall place two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in Section 2 of said Article 16, and one-third thereof in the State Road and Bridge Fund, and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the State, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The adoption of that amendment proposed under Laws 1949, Chapter 747, would change the above quoted provision to read as follows:

"* * * and shall place one-half of the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in Section 2 of said Article 16, apportion for road and street purposes on the basis of population 6% thereof to cities of over 100,000 population, according to the latest available federal census, and 44% thereof to the State Road and Bridge Fund, and further, except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the State, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The purpose of the amendment is to change the method of distribution of the proceeds of the excise tax as now provided by Article IX, Section 5 of the state constitution. The effect would be that after the adoption of the amendment instead of the present distribution of two-thirds of the tax to the Trunk Highway Fund and one-third to the State Road and Bridge Fund, the distribution would be made in the following manner:

(1) One-half to the Trunk Highway Fund.

(2) 6% would be apportioned for road and street purposes on the basis of population to cities of over 100,000 population according to the latest federal census figures.

(3) The remaining 44% would be placed in the State Road and Bridge Fund.

Very truly yours,
JAAB:mm J. A. A. BURNQUIST,
Attorney General

Use of Red

Red is a color to be used judiciously. On too large areas it is overpowering, irritating. Used as an accent color, it lends life and gaiety to less interesting surfaces. Many women like to use it as an accent color in kitchens, but such a warm color should not be used in too large quantities in a room that is so frequently overheated by meal preparation.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

You Can't Build A Better Mousetrap!

"They're not the best-looking boarders a man ever had," Hack Turner said one day, "and they've got awful tempers. But I've found it pays to have 'em around."

Hack was talking about a family of barn owls, nesting in his silo this year. Some folks believe those little white-faced screechers kill chickens—and ought to be shot on sight. But Hack disagrees.

"Up at State University they've studied barn owls for years—and never known one to eat a chicken. On the other hand, a daddy owl will clean up around 300 mice a month. Farmers that kill barn owls are throwing away the best mousetraps known to man!"

From where I sit, when someone shows a prejudice against any group of animals or humans—it's usually just based on misunderstanding. For instance, some folks are plumb intolerant about those of us who enjoy an occasional quiet glass of beer. Get to really know us and you're liable to find we're pretty good birds at that!

UNWRITTEN, BUT TRAGIC

Playwright Charles MacArthur was once hired by a Hollywood studio to rewrite the first half of a script. While he was engaged in this task, shooting began on the second half.

The first scene showed the heroine crying hysterically over something that had previously taken place. Her sobbing was so pathetic that even the director was touched.

"Good heavens!" he said to MacArthur. "What happened to make her cry like that?"

"How should I know?" growled the writer. "I haven't written that part yet."

He was in a small town, tacking up his posters to trees and lampposts when he came across a little girl leading a cow by a rope. The little girl was standing on her lawn and presumably was taking the cow across the street to pasture.

My friend, being a politician, figured he might as well talk to the little girl and give her one of his cards to take to her folks. While he was chatting with her, a window in the house back of the girl opened and a woman said:

"Mary, who is that man you are talking to?"

"I don't know, Mother," Mary replied. "He says he is a politician."

"Mary!" the mother screamed. "Come into the house at once."

There was a pause, and the mother yelled:

"And bring the cow with you."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Peace Talks Proposed by Stassen; U. N. Forces Cross 38th Parallel; High Prices Weaken Defense Plan

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Harold E. Stassen, president of University of Pennsylvania as he announced contents of a message he sent to Soviet Generalissimo Joseph Stalin proposing that they confer and urging Russia to "stop the drift to war." Stassen's message was delivered to the Soviet embassy and a copy to the state department.

STASSEN:
A Just World Peace

Harold E. Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania and twice an aspirant for the Republican presidential nomination, stepped in where angels fear to tread.

The former Minnesota governor wrote a letter to Premier Stalin suggesting that they confer on steps that need be taken to achieve "a just world peace."

Stassen was quick to point out that his letter was written without consultation either with President Truman or the state department; that is, Stassen had written to Stalin in his private capacity and the letter had no official inspiration.

Stassen declared that, if his bid was successful, he would have "four or five of this country's top citizen leaders" accompany him to Moscow for the conference.

There is a possibility that Stalin might accept Stassen's proposal. In fact, some quarters believe the Russians will jump at the chance, if for nothing else, at least for the opportunity to pound out the old propaganda line that the Soviet is anxious for world peace.

There is little possibility, however, that anything constructive will come of such a meeting. Whatever Stalin and Stassen's delegation might agree upon would have no official standing and in all probability would not coincide with American foreign policy.

As could be expected, Stassen's gesture produced political overtones immediately. One Democratic spokesman pointed out that the initiative of any such project properly belongs with the state department.

RISING COSTS:
Cut 750 Jet Fighters

The howl of the housewife that prices have climbed beyond any reasonable or sensible level was taken up by the air force which reported between April and September increases weakened the force's purchasing power by an equivalent of 750 F-86 jet fighter planes.

The cost increases in essential materials, John McCone, undersecretary for air, told the house armed services subcommittee would run about $315 million.

The under-secretary cited many examples. Among the increases were crude rubber, 128.9 per cent; aluminum, 2.9 per cent; copper, 23.6 per cent; tin 32.9 per cent; plus signs of accompanying wage rises as another basic factor in cost estimation.

It all boils down to the fact which the housewife has long known: prices are climbing by leaps and bounds. If the increases were hurting the armed service then perhaps something would be done to relieve the pinch on the general public.

Rep. Carl Vinson, member of the armed services committee, was blunt about the situation:

"Let's not kid ourselves. Congress has a choice of seeing these programs cut (4,428 new aircraft by 1952), or coming up with additional appropriations to meet these rising costs."

Headliners

President Truman who is becoming famous as a letter writer, wrote to his old friend Colorado State Senator Neal Bishop, "I wouldn't appoint John L. Lewis dogcatcher."

"The President could ill afford to have more brains in the dog department than in the department of state," replied the UMW boss with his usual bark and bite.

"We want nothing from Korea. We want no bases there. We do not want to and will not threaten any other country through the temporary presence of American troops in Korea on a U.N. mission," Warren R. Austin, American delegate to the United Nations told the general assembly.

KOREA:
A Future Hope

The United Nations gave Gen. Douglas MacArthur the signal to cross the 38th parallel in the final campaign to crush the Communists and the future hope of a unified Korea.

But the delay in giving that approval may cost the U.N. forces in manpower and material. It gave the Communists time to collect their shattered forces and prepare for another stand, whereas a continued attack by U.N. troops when the Reds were in full flight could have ended the war quickly.

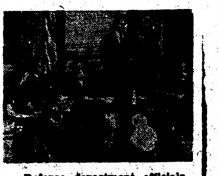
It was the old story of immature thinking and lack of plans on the part of the western nations. Had the situation been reversed, is there anyone who thinks the Reds would have stopped long enough to let U.N. forces regroup? They would have continued to attack and secure any necessary approval later.

But be that as it may, the general assembly finally got around to voting on the invasion of North Korea, approving it 47 to 5.

The assembly authorized:

1. That "all appropriate steps be taken to insure conditions of stability throughout Korea."
2. "That U.N. forces should not remain in any part of Korea otherwise so far as necessary to achieve some other aims of the plan."

Defense Line



Defense department officials and civil defense planners, met with heads of more than 53 women's groups at a meeting in the national security resources board headquarters in Washington.

V.F.W. HOWLS

U. N. Flag 'Superseding' Old Glory

To most people it was amusing, but to the department of agriculture it was serious.

The V. F. W., through its national commander, accused the agriculture department of "an apparent effort to flood the country with United Nations flags" to take the place of Old Glory over the nation's schools.

The commander said the agriculture extension service was supplying U.N. flag-pattern kits to 4-H and women's farm clubs and urging members to become "modern Betsy Rosses" by making such flags at home.

Said an agriculture department spokesman, "The proposal is to display U.N. flags parallel to the American flag, just as it is done by General MacArthur."

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Beaver Greenway marvels at Ken's recital of Thunderhead's jumping prowess. Ken reports that the stallion can clear six-feet hurdles with ease. Greenway suggests to Rob, who wants to make way with Thunderhead, that the horse be sold as a jumper. Greenway wants to take Ken to his Blue Moon ranch for a visit and also as a companion for Carey Marsh. Rob warns of the influence of Carey's grandmother on the girl. Greenway indicates he'd like Ken to train Crown Jewel when the filly is recovered. Ken declines Blue Moon trip for fear of what might happen to Thunderhead if he isn't around to defend the great unruly horse.

CHAPTER XIX

"Carey cannot do anything today and tomorrow. She is going out to the camp with us today and when we round up the horses tomorrow. After all, Caroline, have a heart! Give her a chance to have some fun!"

Color came into the invalid's face, and rage into her eyes. She sat up with surprising vigor.

At that moment Carey entered carrying the breakfast tray. She closed the door and stood transfixed at the sight of her uncle just rising from his chair by the bedside and her grandmother leaping out of bed in pursuit of him.

"Calm yourself, Caroline." Mr. Greenway backed away. "I think I had better stay and finish this discussion, now that it has started. Carey had better hear."

"Oh, Uncle Beaver, what it it? Grandma, what is the matter?"

Mr. Greenway made no move to obey.

Tremblingly Carey put the tray down on the table and said, clasping her hands, "Oh, Uncle Beaver, she'll have a terrible heart spell! You'd better go. I'll take care of her!"

But Mr. Greenway was prepared. "No. I shall not go until this is settled."

Mrs. Palmer sprang to her feet again, her bare toe caught in a loose strand of the rag rug which was beside her bed and she lost her balance. Her brother leaped to catch her but he too slipped and they crashed to the floor together.

Her screams were deafening. Mr. Greenway scrambled hastily to his feet and, exclaiming, "She's in hysterics!" seized the water pitcher and emptied it on her face.

Mrs. Palmer's hysterics turned to choking and sputtering. Carey brought a towel, knelt beside her grandmother and tenderly wiped her face. She looked reproachfully at her uncle who helped her raise the old lady and put her in bed again. She was now sobbing.

"Oh, Uncle Beaver!" reproached Carey, leaning down to put her arms around her grandmother.

"I feel like a brute," muttered Greenway. "Caroline, I didn't mean to knock you down, I hope you don't think that."

He stood there stubbornly. "I want Carey to have her freedom. Let that be understood."

Mrs. Palmer Pries Into Carey's Secrets

As the door closed behind him, Carey brought a dry nightgown for her grandmother and helped her change. The old lady, with a sigh of relief, leaned back against the pillows, held out her arms and turned her gaze upon Carey.

Carey dropped on her knees beside the bed. The old arms closed about her. "My pet! My childikins! Don't cry so, it's all right! He didn't mean it. Your uncle is a good man."

"But oh, Grandma!"

"Now, there — there —" She smoothed Carey's hair. "What is this all about? Is my dearie unhappy? Is there something she should be telling her Grandma?"

Carey did not answer. She was crying.

"You aren't keeping anything from me, are you, pet?"

Carey withdrew a little and felt for her handkerchief. The old lady, with her charming, irresistible smile drew Carey's hands into hers and with her own handkerchief wiped away the tears. Carey was thinking furiously. Her grandmother had always wanted the most complete confidence. To keep anything from her was a crime.

"Well, I don't know," Carey hesitated.

"This boy—Kenneth MacLaughlin —he seems a very nice boy and I like his parents. Has there been something between you? Is that what you want to tell me, dear?"

"Has—he—said anything? Tried to—?"

Carey turned her face still farther away. Her ear was scarlet. "Well, he—" her sentence did not end.

"Kissed you?" said her Grandma playfully.

Carey nodded without speaking.

"When?"

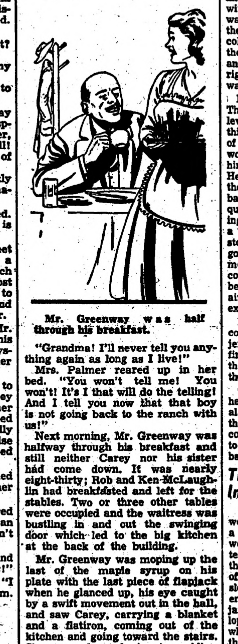
"One night."

"Where were you?"

"It was outside the house, I heard the puppy crying. I went out to him. Ken came, too." Suddenly Carey was in a panic. In a moment it was going to come out that she had been in bed; had gone out in her pajamas—

But her grandmother's mind was on another angle of the scene, "Did you let him kiss you?"

Carey nodded silently. Her grandmother said nothing. After a long minute of suspense, Carey turned to look into her face and saw there a look of scathing condemnation. The grey eyes blazed from between narrow slits. The mouth was twisted in scorn. The face cried to her, "So! I got it out of you! Now I know, I had suspected as much!" And Carey, to the very foundation of her being, felt the shock of this betrayal! She jumped to her feet.



Mr. Greenway was half through his breakfast.

"Grandma! I'll never tell you anything again as long as I live!"

Mrs. Palmer reared up in her bed. "You won't tell me! You won't! It's I that will do the telling! And I tell you now that that boy is not going back to the ranch with us!"

Next morning, Mr. Greenway was halfway through his breakfast and still neither Carey nor his sister had come down. It was nearly eight-thirty; Rob and Ken McLaughlin had breakfasted and left for the stables. Two or three other tables were occupied and the waitress was bustling in and out the swinging door which led to the big kitchen at the back of the building.

Mr. Greenway was moping up the last of the maple syrup on his plate with the last piece of flapjack when he glanced up, his eye caught by a swift movement out in the hall, and saw Carey, carrying a blanket and a flatiron, coming out of the kitchen and going toward the stairs. She was dressed in her riding clothes.

He had seen his niece carrying blankets and flatirons before, and felt a quick anger which would almost have done credit to his sister. He rose abruptly and pursued the girl.

"What's the meaning of this, Carey?"

"Lumbago! I can't go out with you."

"Is it real or fake?" he roared.

"I—I—don't know!"

He dropped her arm and she hurried one way, up the stairs, and he the other way toward the kitchen door. He opened it. Three women were there: one waitress in her neat, striped cotton dress: the other waitress, the older one, a dark, weary woman, was cooking the breakfasts; and Mrs. Evans' bare arm, as she raised her coffecup, was like a great ham.

Mrs. Evans put down her coffeecup, wiped her mouth, and pushed her chair back. Her bright pink face, framed in a fluff of blonde hair, was so fat it sagged forward as she leaned over, propping herself against the table.

"I do. Anybody sick?" she boomed.

"Know anything about lumbago?"

Mrs. Evans 'Cures' Mrs. Palmer's Ills

She was already taking off her apron and moving across the room to hang it up. She must have weighed two hundred pounds, he thought, tall as well as broad and with the voice of a man.

"Did you ever use an iron on the back of a person with lumbago?"

She took off her apron. "My grandfather. Had it all the time. Red flannel's the best. Horse liniment's good—wait a minute, I'll get the bottle." She waddled to the corner where there was a wall cabinet and took out a bottle. They went upstairs together.

Without knocking they entered Mrs. Palmer's room. Mr. Greenway pointed to the bed where Mrs. Palmer was lying flat, her eyes half-closed in suffering. She emitted a faint groan with every breath.

As her uncle entered the room she said, "She won't turn over!"

Mrs. Evans moved to the bedside and took the iron from Carey's hand.

Mrs. Palmer's eyes flew wide open.

Mr. Greenway took Carey's arm, "Come on. There's nothing more for you to do. He strode toward the door, dragging Carey along with him.

Thunderhead had known, all week long, of the men who were working at the northern end of the ravine. Now and then, as he grazed, he lifted his head, hearing and feeling the vibration of the feet of galloping horses. But they did not come down into the river bottom. He and his mares were never molested. There was something agreeable in the proximity of men and in the knowledge that work was going on within a few miles of his band. This was like being on the ranch again—the Goose Bar Ranch. Like being a colt, with men coming and going, the sound of voices and laughter and shouts. The smells were all right too. There was no fear, there was no tension or excitement.

But this particular morning, as Thunderhead stood, drinking in the level sunrays, he drank in something else too. It began like a feeling of uneasiness. In a human being, it would have been a premonition. In him, it was an increasing alertness. He began to investigate. Within the immediate proximity of his band, which was scattered over a quarter-mile area, there was nothing to cause uneasiness. He trotted a few hundred yards northward, stopped and searched the air. He got the scent of the horses, of the men who had been working on the corral, familiar odors which he had been smelling for a week. Today the air carried the taint of tension and excitement.

He went back to his mares and commenced grazing again, then jerked his head up as he saw the first of the riders advancing from the south. They were strung across the valley. They came slowly.

One mare after the other jerked her head up. The colts sensed the alarm and ran to their mothers, then faced about to stare at the oncoming men. A few of them began to trot away. Presently the whole band was moving northward.

Thunderhead Leaps In Freedom Bid

Soon the horses realized they were being driven. This, to the half a dozen or so wild mares which were in the band, was a new and terrifying thing and their fear ran through the entire herd. A group of the mares bolted up the western slope, but were met by two riders emerging from the trees. The mares jamed to a stop, wheeled and galloped back to the rest of the band which by now were coming to meet them. Colliding, they reared. Dust rose in clouds. They milled about, then started back down the valley in the direction from which they had come. But the riders bore down upon them.

Now the frenzy increased. The wild mares milled, rearing to paw against the walls.

Thunderhead soon had them bunched and under control as if, somehow, he could deliver them from this trap. Then he made the complete circle of the corral, seeking an exit. The mares scattered again.

But Ken was watching Thunderhead, his heart aching for him, understanding every movement the stallion made, every look of the wild eye as he reared up, flung himself around and reversed his direction.

The scene which followed was witnessed by all the men, and talked about for many months to come.

Thunderhead made one last tour of the corral, stopping now and then to rear against the walls, to reach up with his nose, seeking some weak place, some crack through which he could escape, there was none. Then he gave up. He quieted down; they were all quieting down. He still trotted around and around the enclosure, his ears cocked, the crimson lining showing inside his palpitating nostrils, but his pace was slower.

A rope sang out. It was Tad Stevens'. "Thar she is!" he yelled.

Another rope followed and, even while Rob roared, "Cut that out!" and then, frantically, "God-damn it!" the damage was done.

Thunderhead went into the frenzy which a singing rope creates in some horses. He hurled himself at the western fence, leaping as high as he could.

THESE SHOES WOULD BE HARD TO FILL!

Your business-owned private power company has worn them for a long time . . . bringing the comforts of electrical living to your home, your farm, your business.

Now that they're "broken in", these shoes are mighty attractive. Public power, for instance, would like to wear them . . . to bring you electricity from power plants that pay no taxes and to let YOU pay the difference through increased taxes on things you buy, on the profits you make, on the wages you earn.

Let's keep these shoes where they belong — on business owned private power companies who PAY THEIR OWN WAY and still provide electricity at rates 10% lower than the 1935-1939 level.

Like the idea? Then you also like the system of free American enterprise which makes it possible.

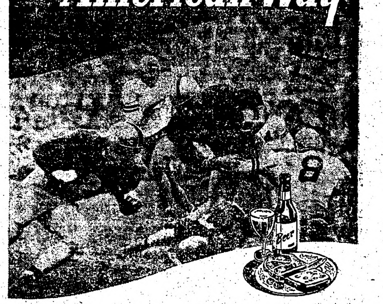
Your electric company — a development of free enterprise through private initiative — is your best source of low-cost electricity.

OTTER TAIL POWER COMPANY

The above picture is of Art Anderson and his daughter Corriene of Strandquist. It was taked beside two stalks of tall corn he has grown on his farm west of Strandquist.

The corn was planted on a 10 acre field on June 20th, and this picture was taken September 3rd There stalks' measure 18 ft. in height and the remainder of the corn on this field is the same. Not bad, considering this has been a poor year for corn!

The American Way



Frosty October weather means football! In Minnesota, as throughout the nation, sport lovers jam the stadiums to watch two Varsity or Pro teams fight it out on the gridiron for sixty minutes.

Following the game, arriving home, it's a real pleasure to enjoy with your companion of the day a cool, refreshing glass of Minnesota-brewed beer. That's the American Way.

For beer is the kind of beverage Americans like. It belongs . . . to pleasant living, to good fellowship, to sensible moderation. And our right to enjoy it, this too, belongs . . . to our own American heritage of personal freedom.

Beer belongs . . . enjoy it

Why Minnesota people go underground

PERHAPS YOU THINK of iron-ore mining as strictly an open-pit operation. Yet for years thousands of Minnesota miners have been going deep underground for that rich, red stuff. Why? "Because," writes E. W. Davis, Director of the Mines Experiment Station, University of Minnesota, "beyond certain depths, underground mining is the only conceivable method. The first step is sinking a shaft. Then drifts are run out into the ore, and working faces established. The ore must be hauled through these long drifts to the shaft and hoisted. The large operating cost has made underground mining unprofitable on the Mesabi . . ."

Davis

GRANTED, underground mining of iron ore is no way to get rich. Labor costs are far higher than for open-pit mining. You have to buy a forest of timber, carloads of explosive . . . and the electric bill is something to behold. All told, it costs about three times as much to unearth a ton of underground ore, compared with open-pit ore.

But Minnesota is in no position to ignore ore that's expensive to produce. If we are to stay in the iron mining business, we have to go after both the deeply buried ore and the low-grade ores. In so going, we'll be practicing true conservation—lengthening the life span of our high-grade ore.

The low-grade ores cost plenty, too. Having less iron and more waste per ton, they must be extensively treated. And the leanest of them—taconite rock—must undergo what amounts to a manufacturing process before any steelmaker will use it.

Still, production costs must not go too high—not if Minnesota wants to keep thousands of her citizens in business and on ore payrolls. Today, for the first time, this state faces real ore competition from other areas. Our costs must be right if our product is to meet this competition.

Minnesota ore producers hope they can soon see their way clear to large-scale investments in new mines and plants. Minnesota people can encourage the producers by insisting that this industry be treated the same as any other industry whose success is important to the state's economy.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that the tools of medicine have improved so much that a country doctor of 1950 is a thousand times more effective than a king's physician in 1900.

A FAIR DEAL FOR MINNESOTA'S IRON ORE MEANS A GOOD DEAL FOR YOU

That is how LIFE magazine summarized a half century of American medical progress that is bringing you and your fellow citizens better health and longer, happier living than people anywhere else in the world enjoy.

Those who favor federal control of medicine are trying hard to prove that Americans are in bad shape physically; that there is a general shortage of doctors, nurses and hospitals; that hundreds of thousands are dying "needlessly." They may distort the record but they cannot disprove it: America's death rate in 1949 reached the lowest level in the history of mankind — substantially lower than England's under socialized medicine.

In medical care, as in other branches of science, when politics moves in, progress moves out. Misleading political promises and bureaucratic red tape have no place where human health is concerned. You owe it to yourself and your family to speak out on this matter to your elected representatives.

Keep American Medicine Progressing!

Exceeded Expectations

"If the Nation's Capital continues to grow during the remainder of the present century as rapidly as it grew between 1910 and 1914, it will have a population of more than 800,000 at the beginning of the next century," wrote President William Howard Taft in the National Geographic magazine of March, 1915. Current census bureau estimates show populations of 870,000 for the District of Columbia proper and 1,402,000 for the Washington metropolitan district.

PLATFORM OF CURTISS OLSON
DFL Candidate for Congress
Ninth District, Minnesota

AGRICULTURE: Vigorous support of the Administration Farm program designed to bring Agriculture 100% parity. A farm program that will premit farmers to plan on a long range basis. Parity means equality; Olson will work for equality.

RED RIVER VALLEY: Creation of a Red River Valley Authority to halt recurring floods in the valley and Northern Minnesota. Planned along the lines of the proposed MVA and the TVA.

UNITED NATIONS and FOREIGN POLICY: Full support of the United Nations and its specialized agencies to suppress all forms of armed aggression and insure world peace. Establishment of a world police force sponsored by the United Nations with all member nations supplying troops. Support of the Marshall Plan, Point IV Program and civilian control of the Atomic and Hydrogen bombs.

BUSINESS: Positive enforcement of the anti-trust laws to protect small business. Support of legislation designed to give protection to our competitive enterprise system. Will oppose all types of monopoly. Small business must not be driven into a position, by either big business or government, where it cannot continue to perform its proper function.

CO-OPERATIVES: Support of cooperatives. Opposed to unfair taxation of co-ops. The REA must be expanded to include a rural telephone system. Farmers must be permitted to ship and sell their own products to their own co-operatives.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAYS: Support of the proposed St. Lawrence Waterway and favor more equitable freight rates for our Northwest. Present rate fixing discriminates against our area.

LAW ENFORCEMENT: Enactment of laws that will put a halt to nationwide racketeering and gambling. Suport all states in their efforts to prevent the building up of syndicate rackets.

SOCIAL REHABILITATION: Full support of Federal laws to improve conditions for persons committed to institutions, such as mental and feeble minded cases.

CIVIL RIGHTS and LABOR: Favor Civil Rights legislation, opposed to all discriminatory laws and opposed to any and all oppressive labor laws. Will support legislation to advance the status of the Indian. Olson will be guided by the advice and council of Indian leaders on Indian problems.

HOUSING: Will support housing laws designed to bring housing within the reach of all, more especially, veterans. Favor veterans preference and will support laws designed to improve our Veterans Administration.

HEALTH: Support a national Health bill that will bring medical care to more people and provide some insurance against health disaster. Support a program of Federal Aid to Medical and Nursing students. Favor legislation to set up health clinics as a preventive from sickness. "Our Nation's health must be made stronger, if we are to continue in world leadership."

SOCIAL SECURITY: A broader base under Social Security, to the end that more people will participate and our aged made more secure.

VETERANS: Will sponsor legislation to improve the G. I. Bill, along lines requested by veterans' organizations, including G. I. benefits to the defenders of freedom in Korea.

'Here's a PARTNERSHIP That Pays'

... says C. L. VINSON, Pillager, Minn., dairyman

Mr. Vinson has an up-and-coming partner in his son, David, who's mighty eager to learn how things ought to be run on a dairy farm. "Partnership like that pays off," he says, "and there's another partnership that pays well, too—I mean the way so many of us are partners in owning and operating LAND O'LAKES Creameries." As one of the farmer-owners of the Farmers Co-op Creamery Assn. at Pillager, Mr. Vinson knows the benefits of marketing through LAND O'LAKES—"the farmer gets what he's got coming, shares in the savings that a co-op makes, and always gets fair treatment from his own organization." Yes, LAND O'LAKES is a working partnership of 100,000 dairy and poultrymen. They know it pays to market the LAND O'LAKES way.

Larson-Cornelius Wedding

At a beautiful candle light ceremony which took place on Sunday, Oct. 29 at Nazareth Lutheran Church, Miss Dorothy Larson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Larson exchanged nuptial vows with Conrad Franklin Cornelius, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Cornelius of Spencer, North Carolina. The ceremony took place in a flower decorated chancel with tall white candlebras holding lighted candles Illuminating the aisle and chancel, The Rev. G. S. Thompson of Thief River Falls officiated at a double ring ceremony.

Mrs. Manvel Moe, an aunt of the bride, presided at the organ. She played a program of nuptial music and the traditional wedding marches and accompanied Miss Delores Sandberg who sang "I Love You Truly" and "O, Perfect Love". They wore floor length gowns of pink and blue respectively.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attired in a white bridal satin gown with inserts of net in the bodice. The full gathered skirt fell into a long train and she wore a fingertip veil of tulle and lace which fell from a crown of orange blossoms. She carried a white bride's Bible on which lay red roses and white carnations and wore a donble strand of pearls and pearl ear rings.

Serving the bride as maid of honor was Miss Joyce Forland of Newfolden, a close friend of the bride, who wore a gown of yellow net and taffeta.

Brides maids were Mrs. Lowell Larson, sister-in-law of the bride who wore blue marquesette and Miss Barbara Cornelius of Spencer, N. C., a sister of the groom, who wore green marquesette. All the bride's maids carried colonial bouquets of yellow roses and mums. All wore a strand of pearls.

Little Kathryn Boyum of Greenbush, niece of the bride, was flower girl and wore a gown of white satin with matching head piece. She also wore a single strand of pearls, a gift of the bride and carried a miniature colonial boquet of roses and carnations.

Attending the groom were his father. Also Lowell Larson of TRF, brother of the bride and Donald Larson, twin brother of the bride. Ushers were Orville Larson, brother of the bride, and Kenneth Boyum of Greenbush, brother-in-law of the bride. The groom, the fathers attendants and ushers all wore conventional dark suits and white carnation boutenìers. The bride's mother wore a cocoa brown crepe dress with brown accessories and a corsage of red roses and carnations.

After the ceremony a reception was given in the chunch parlors to about 150 guests.

Serving as waitresses were the bride's cousins Arlette Moe, Gloria Langlie, Marilyn Moe, Shirley and Mary Ann Anderson.

Iris and Eileen Larson, cousins of the bride, had charge of the gifts. Mrs. Kenneth Boyum, the bride's sister, had charge of flowers. Marian Larson, cousin of the bride, cut the wedding cake. Mrs. S. G. Tharaldson, the bride's aunt poured. Richard carpenter of Morris, Ill. and Tonya Cornelius of Spencer, N. C. neice and nephew of the groom, had charge of the guest book.

The bride is a graduate of Newfolden High school and has recently been employad at Sears in Thief River Falls. After service in the U. S, Navy, the groom attended the Bob Jones University at Greenville, So. Carolina and is at present employed by the Southern Railway. The young couple will make their home at 400 Yadkin Ave.; Spencer, No. Carolina.

Those from out of town who attended the wedding were; Mr. F. T. Cornelius and daughter Barbara and Tonya Cornelius of Spencer, N. C. Richard Carpenter of Morris, Ill., Mr. and Mrs. H. Goschie of Silverton, Oregon, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Billberg and sons of Wannaska. Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Larson of Crooksten, Mr. and Mrs. A. Myers, David and Carol of Gatzke, Mr. and Mrs. K. Boyum and Kathryn and Hans Boyum of Greenbush, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Larson and Mr. and Mrs. H. Langlie and Lynette of Thief River Falls, Marian Larson from Glencoe, Eileen and Arlelle Larson. Funds For Material Available; Donated Labor Is Sought

$1,500.00 for a proposed goose project on the Mud Lake Refuge has been received, according to Robley Hunt, refuge manager. The Mud Lake Goose project has been under consideration for several years, and the project is finally reaching its climax.

The funds received are for material only. No funds are available for labor, and as a result Sportsmen's clubs from Middle River, Gatzke, Grygla, Holt, Newfolden and Thief River Falls will be asked to organize crews to do the actual work.

In an interview with this newspaper on the proposed project, Mr. Hunt stated that the project would be started with about 100 pinioned geese. The goose farm would be located in about the center of the Refuge, but before anything could be done, a ditch would have to be made all around the "goose farm". This would serves as a fire break. The entire goose farm would have to be fenced too, and the fencing would have to be 'sunk' into the ground to keep out skunks and other animals who might attempt to get in and kill the geese.

Mr. Hunt is very enthusiastic over the proposal. Residents of the area who have had the proposal explained to them are equally as enthusiastic. Mr. Hunt will be meeting with the various sportsmen's clubs this month to get committees organized to do the wrok.

Geese (as well as other migratory waterfowl) are known to return to nest at the place where they were reared. The goose project was first tried out at the Seney Refuge in Michigan with a few geese in the refuge that had been reared there. The Mud Lake Refuge would be ideal for the goose project.

Watch this newspaper for further details on the project!

The season on beaver trapping will run from November 4 thru Novemer 18, with trapping permitted between 8:00 A. M. and 5:00 P. M., it was announced by Conservation Commission Chester S. Wilson.

Save Money On This Home Mixed Cough Syrup

Big Saving. No Cooking. So Easy.

You'll be surprised how quickly and easily you can relieve coughs due to colds, when you try this splendid recipe. It gives you about four times as much cough medicine for your money, and you'll find it truly wonderful for real relief.

Make a syrup with 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water. No cooking needed. (Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.) Then put 2½ ounces of Pinex (obtained from any druggist) in a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of medicine that will please you by its quick action. It never spoils, and tastes fine—children love it.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action in coughs and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

Without Painful Backache

As we get older, stress and strain, overexertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Getting up nights or frequent passages may result from minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or dietary indiscretions.

If your discomforts are due to these causes, don't wait, try Doan's Pills, a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While these symptoms may often otherwise occur, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman-MacArthur Discuss Korea Reconstruction at Wake Meeting; Dewey Says He Won't Run in 1952

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

President Truman and his personal military and diplomatic advisers were photographed just before the takeoff for Wake island and the meeting with Gen. Douglas MacArthur. From left to right: W. Averill Harriman, Dean Rusk, Phillip Jessup, Mr. Truman, Frank Pace, Jr., and Gen. Omar Bradley.

WAKE ISLAND:

Talks Lack Something

On the hot, lonely little island of Wake in mid-Pacific, President Harry S. Truman and Gen. Douglas MacArthur, two men who have had much to do with world destiny in the last few years, had a talk.

After it was over a statement was issued which said the two discussed a number of subjects vital to world problems. According to the press release they talked about reconstruction of Korea, the possibility of a Japanese peace treaty, and the general agreement to strive toward peace in unity with other U.N. nations.

The meeting was of great interest to the American public from another angle. MacArthur and Mr. Truman had never met and their conflicting views on a number of subjects had been reported in the press during recent months.

Reports of the meeting indicated that MacArthur had only a general idea of the topics to be discussed when he was asked to meet the President. It was also reported that Truman conducted the talks from an agenda scribbled on a pad.

Observers believed these reports gave an indication of the how and why of the meeting. The President had a number of topics to discuss with the U.N. commander and he limited the talks to that agenda. It was also suggestive, some observers believed, that Mr. Truman was acting in his capacity as President and commander-in-chief and not as a man seeking advice.

On the surface the meeting was cordial. In farewell, MacArthur said: "Good-by, sir. Happy landing. It has been a real honor to talk with you."

But the other MacArthur seemed revealed when he said good-by to Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff: "Good-by, Omar. Don't let them get you down up there."

To the observer not so close to hand, the MacArthur-Truman meeting seemed to lack something, although no one has been able to say definitely just what.

DEWEY:

A Bombshell

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey tossed a political bombshell upon the national scene by saying flatly he would not run for President in 1952 and would back Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower for the Republican nomination.

The governor had no more than made his statement when other liberal Republicans, including Harold Stassen, backed the move.

"Under no circumstances that I can conceive," Dewey said, "will I accept the nomination for President in 1952, and I doubt if there is any possibility the situation would arise thereafter."

The Democrats had nothing to say about Dewey's announcement. President Truman when informed of it was reported to have murmured "that's fine" and continued his swim in the Pacific.

A number of political figures, however, recalled that the governor said shortly before he announced for the third term as governor of New York, he would not be a candidate for that office again.

The last time Eisenhower mentioned politics he said he did not want to identify himself with any one political party. He added that "I have no political connections, no political ambitions, and don't want any connections with politics."

Headliners

"Firm action in Korea must not lull us into a sense of false security. What happened in Korea has set world peace on stronger foundations. There may be time to build up a European army with strong aid from Britain, the United States and Canada," Winston Churchill told a cheering mass rally of the Conservative party.

"As for myself, my convictions as to the place and methods through which I can best contribute something to the cause of freedom have been often expressed. They have not changed. Here at Columbia University I have a task that would excite the pride and challenge the qualifications and strength of any man. I still believe that it offers to such an individual as myself rich opportunities for serving," General Eisenhower said in answer to Thomas Dewey's suggestion he become the Republican candidate for president in 1952.

THE DRAFT:

Fathers in Line

National Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey, worried about where the men are coming from for the draft, announced he might ask the President to erase almost all draft dependency deferments except for fathers. Later he said he even favored taking some men with children.

Hershey said it might be necessary to take some fathers if the goal of three million men in the armed forces by next June was to be met.

Meanwhile 19,000 young physicians, dentists and veterinarians registered for a possible 21 months' military service. Of the total, 1,522 face induction by January 15 unless they volunteer first.

If there are too few volunteers the army will begin an induction program November 15 by taking 300 physicians, 300 dentists and 50 veterinarians. Another 322 doctors, 200 dentists and 50 veterinarians will be called by January 15.

All doctors through age 50 eventually must register, but the first group includes only those deferred during World War II to train at their own or government expense and saw less than 21 months service.

HARD TO BELIEVE

Nine Firms Announce Price Cuts

In these days when the public seems to be fair game for all kinds of price boosts, it's hard to believe that nine companies announced price cuts. The cuts were on bag-packed coffee, airplane parts and asphalt tile.

The A & P company and Grand Union company, retail grocery chains, announced reductions on the price of their various brands of bag coffee by two cents a pound.

Boeing Airplane of Seattle announced it was reducing by 10 per cent the price on all stratocruiser spare parts. The cut was retroactive to September 1.

Armstrong Cork company put price reductions of about 5 per cent in effect on standard asphalt tile.

Coffee prices had been on the upswing for many months.

Good Dairy Barn Lighting Essential

Speeds Up Work, Aids Sanitation Problems

Good lighting in the dairy barn is not only convenient, but necessary. For it speeds up work and helps the dairyman with his sanitation problems.

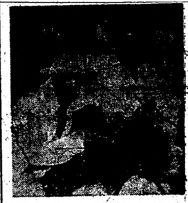
Farmers, therefore, are cautioned by agricultural engineers to wire their barns so that they have plenty of illumination on the job, around the job and going to and from the job. For these purposes, it is recommended that lighting outlets be located every 12 feet on the center line of the litter alley and every 20 feet on the center line of the feed alley.

The above picture illustrates lighting outlets at 12-foot intervals on the center line of the litter alley and every 20 feet on the center line of the feed alley.

If more illumination is desired than can be obtained from the above plan, a second line of lights can be placed in the litter alley over the hind quarters of each row of cows.

Flood lights on the outside corner of the barn, or conveniently placed yard lights, will help prevent accidents by illuminating the farmer's path from the barn to the house. If a milk house loading platform is used, it also should be well lighted.

Final Vaccination



Oscar Flores, director, (left) and General Harry H. Johnson, co-director, were on hand to see the final dose of vaccine administered in the three-year battle to eradicate foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico.

During the campaign approximately 17,000,000 animals were vaccinated three times, and the majority of them received a fourth immunization.

There have been no outbreaks of the disease since December, 1949.

Fresh Market Vegetable Tonnage Tops Last Year

The total tonnage of vegetables for fresh market during the 1950 summer season was approximately 4 per cent more than last year, the United States department of agriculture reports.

Substantially larger quantities of onions, watermelons, and cabbage, and more lettuce than last year, were noted in the report. Tonnages of celery, tomatoes and peas were down somewhat.

Hickman Puts Fun into the Game

By GRANTLAND RICE

Grantland Rice

A PLANK has only two sides but there are many sides to coaching a football team. The sere facts are that it is probably the most-sided of all sports.

For example, you may have noticed how the Yale football squad reported for fall practice. Some 75 of them were on hand at 6 a.m. Many were ready and dressed by 4:30 or 5 and they found a smiling fat man waiting.

His name was Herman Hickman, 300 or 320 pounds of pure ability at all the turns needed to handle a football squad. Herman is a very fine coach. He is also a philosopher. Sometimes known as the Smoky Mountain Homer, he is also a poet.

The main point is that this Yale squad in the daybreak grayness knew that win, lose or draw it was going to have a lot of fun playing under the mountainous Herman. Which is supposed to be the main idea of football. At least that was the original idea, since badly distorted and twisted out of shape on too many occasions.

Hickman hasn't the best material in the country this season. He hasn't the best material in the Ivy league.

But they will win a few games here and there—they'll always be giving the best they have, partly because they have a coach who knows the complicated all-around business of coaching a football team—which includes many more things than sheer expertness in devising plays or teaching fundamentals.

Football has made a forward leap in this direction in late years. It has a far greater number who also understand the idea that football should also include some fun. Meet such coaches as Red Blaik, Red Sanders, Marchy Schwartz, Lefty James, Wes Fesler, etc., and you'll get the idea.

But in this respect no one will have anything on Herman Hickman who also happens to be one of the hardest losers in the game. He expresses the idea in a brief message, just received—

"When Homer smote the rival spine,
He made his rival quit or faint.
He socked them hard by flank and line—
And what has Homer got that I ain't?"

* * *

Pro Football's Setup

After a matter of some 25 or 30 years, pro football is getting its best chance this season to collect its full share of change.

There was never so much sheer waste in any sport as pro football knew in its wrecking war years. But that's all over now and there seems to be quite enough talent on hand to supply the 13 teams all set to go.

It would take a Delphic oracle, super-charged, to pick the two survivors from the two circuits. There have been too many shifts back and forth, too many exchanges, too many bolstered teams from last fall.

Among those you can gamble will be up around the front are Greasy Neale's Eagles and Paul Brown's Browns. Others to be watched include George Halas and his Chicago Bears, plus Steve Owen's Giants and Red Strader's Yankees. Chicago's Cardinals, Green Bay's Packers, Baltimore's Colts and Los Angeles' Rams are still doubtful quantities. So are Detroit's Lions. But Sammy Baugh and an improved line still keeps Washington's Redskins dangerous—always hard to beat.

This is sure a season of many sudden upsets and one thing is dead sure—you are seeing greater passing this fall than you ever saw before. I'm not going to try to run up any completed list, but a season that has Baugh, Luckman, Lujack, Conerly, Graham, Albert, Tittle, Tidwell, Waterfield and Ratterman should find the atmosphere packed with footballs headed for extended hands and arms.

The exhibition attendance was extremely good and when the real shooting gets farther under way, it should hold up for a while—at least. There will be the usual decline or crash for the steady losers. You can judge this by the number of patrons the Browns, Athletics, Reds and a few others have been drawing in baseball.

* * *

Closing Attendance Drop

It is about time that club owners were giving some attention to the terrific attendance flop through September. The rapid city of Brooklyn, for example, was playing to some 2,000 souls only two weeks before the steamy pennant race to the wire. Attendance figures from 1,100 to 1,900 were far from uncommon. They were often the order of the week.

This big crash was not due to any runaway races.

There seems to be two reasons for this big slump. One is television. The other is a season that is far too long. Baseball breaks into the sporting pages in late February and is still hanging around until October. Seven months is too long to keep drama or melodrama sustained. You just naturally get worn out with seven months of anything.

PAVING A YARD

Question: We have a small space in our yard that is unpaved. We want to cement it. What sort of solution could we pour into this earth to deaden the roots of the wild greens that grow up there? We fear they might come up through the cement after it is laid.

Answer: If the cement is properly laid with several inches of thickness over well-tamped earth, I do not see how ordinary weeds, etc. could break through the cement. Lacking air and sunlight there will be no growth. I do not see that you have any reason to worry if the cement is thick enough and properly laid. However, if you wish to kill the growth before-hand, pour on a strong solution of rock salt or calcium chloride. There are also weed-killing preparations on sale at garden supply stores.

A Big Man for A Big District......

Com. Sofus H. Bjertness of Grygla is a man that is well-respected through-out Marshall County. As commissioner from Marshall's Fifth District, he has a big job—a job that takes a lot of time, a lot of foresight and a lot of good sound judgement. The size of the district means that Mr. Bjertness must be around a lot to meet with people who have problems that must be taken care of.

When the voters of the Fifth Commissioner District go to the polls November 7th, they will do well to carefully weigh all factors before marking their ballot. The administration of Com. Bjertness has been so outstanding that he deserves to be returned to office for another four years by a big plurality.

It takes a man at least four years to get well acquainted with the job. Experience becomes quite a facter in the job of commissioner and experience can be garnered only by actual work. During his first term in office Com. Bjertness has tackled drainage and road problems with zeal and vigor that has meant accomplishments for Eastern Marshall County. This section of the county is still in its development stage and the extent we go forward depends a great deal on the men we have in office.

Sofus (as everyone knows him) has an approach to a problem that usually brings results. For instance: at the last session of the Minnesota Legislature, Mr. Bjertness spent considerable time in St. Paul at his own expense, working for solutions to problems that vitally affect eastern Marshall county and the county as a whole. One county road in the east and that requires a great deal of maintenance was taken over by the Minnesota Highway Department and made into Highway No. 219, for a distance of 11 miles. This was secured through legislative action and meant a great deal to the people of the Fifth District in helping to stretch the road dollar.

Likewise, another accomplishment was the equalization of land values in the county so that the west end now stands its share of the tax burden. Thas should interest every property owner in this section.

During his administration, a tremendous amount of ditch cleaning has been accomplished. As a matter of fact more ditches have been cleaned this past four years than in the entire past years in that district. We could go on and inumerate countless other things that Com. Bjertness has done for his district and for the county as a whole. We don't believe this is necessary, though, as most people can see for themselves what has been done. No section has been favored; each area in the Fifth District has received its fair share as funds became available for doing the work.

If you desire to know anything further about Sofus, ask your neighbor, or stop in at the Record office. One good term deserves another.

For Honesty and Humanity in Government

Governor Youngdahl

A man with convictions and the courage to act upon them, Governor Youngdahl has been willing to fight for improvement after improvement to increase the usefulness of our state government and enlarge opportunities for our citizens.

He saw that slot machines and other gambling rackets were providing bad influences for our youth, stealing the earnings of families and corrupting public officials. He asked for and, against the most powerful opposition, obtained approval for a new anti-slot machine law which has driven gambling devices out of the state and put law enforcement upon a new basis of effectiveness. "This," said he, "is a fight for the welfare of youth."

Opportunities for the Afflicted

Quick to appreciate the plight of the mentally ill, Governor Youngdahl launched a far-reaching new program which has improved the care of the mentally ill and extended the hope for recovery to many who otherwise would have to live out their days in an institution.

New Chance for Youth

Recognizing our youth as our greatest asset, Governor Youngdahl championed and succeeded, with cooperation of the Legislature, in launching a constructive new Youth Conservation program which is rehabilitating youthful offenders and organizing activities which prevent delinquency.

Aid for Minnesota Schools

Always a champion of education, Governor Youngdahl fought for an improvement in state school aid distribution and other measures which have helped so much to improve school support in so many districts of the state.

In field after field, Minnesota's Governor has sought to adjust services of the state to meet needs of the people.

Recognition

Educators, editors and parents have applauded his efforts. President Laurence Gould of Carleton College said: "He pursues the very ends we seek to achieve in education." Said President Edgar M. Carlson of Gustavus Adolphus College: "Enemy of all corruption in government, he is the friend of all good citizens." Parents write to him: "Keep up your efforts to make Minnesota a better place in which to live." Finally there is the verdict expressed by one of Minnesota's newspapers, the Ivanhoe Times:

> "We have never ceased to admire Luther Youngdahl's moral integrity. Nothing, we are sure, could shake this man from a course he believed right. No pressures, no threats, no intimidations, would make him back away from a line of duty which he saw as just and correct."

Assuring "Clean Sweep"

A weekly bath for the broom will insure a clean sweep and give months of additional life to the broom. The broom should be dipped up and down in hot soapy water and then in a clear water rinse.

Quinine and Malaria

Quinine suppresses the symptoms of malaria, but neither prevents nor cures the disease. When the patient stops taking the quinine there is the malaria again.

Job Turnover

Highest job turnover rate in industry is stenographers—100,000 quit each year, chiefly to get married.

Uncle Sam Says

How time flies. Just a few years back you were thrilled with the "ole swimmin' hole," ready to take a plunge into its cool, flowing waters. Maybe ten years from now you'll want to take another plunge, such as buying a new home, a new car, a long vacation trip. These take money and where's it coming from. The smart people know the easy answer—U. S. Savings Bonds. Enroll now for the Payroll Savings Plan where you work, or if self-employed, the Bond-A-Month Plan at your bank. You then save automatically and in 1960 your Savings Bonds will produce $4 for every $3 invested today.

Voice Your Choice!

They know that all the beautiful promises of "welfare," "security," and "steadily rising income" won't amount to a hill of beans if we don't set our political house in order and quit the waste and extravagance which are whittling at the worth of every family's income and savings.

In the last presidential election, for example, out of about 93 million eligible voters, less than 49 million actually bothered to cast their ballots. And out of this small percentage the winning team didn't even get a majority of the votes.

Yet we are being "sold" on endless taxing and spending, and on experiments in socialism that threaten to choke off the productive machinery which gives us more good things than people in any other land enjoy.

Today your dollars are worth 40 cents less than in 1940 .... taxes remain at record highs while political wastrels plunge us deeper into debt . . . and Moscow chuckles as it watches us rush toward bankruptcy.

Who can help turn the tide toward sound, business-like government, which alone can bring security for all of us? You can! . . . Think the issues through "on your own." Voice your choice in the American way. And don't let anything short of death keep you from adding your ballot to the cause of responsible government on Election Day, Tuesday, November 7.

If you don't know the candidates for office or the location of your polling place, phone this newspaper for information.

Cattle Egret

The cattle egret, unlike the rest of the heron family, does not live on water creatures. It catches insects disturbed by the feet of grazing livestock. Well known to parts of Africa and South America, it was first recorded in Australia by the National Geographic Society-Smithsonian Institution Arnhem land expedition in 1948.

Clear Water Absorbed

Clear water seeps into the ground 10 times faster than muddy water. Keeping the ground covered with crop residue or cover crops helps clear water soak into soil instead of muddy water running off land.

Spray for Apple Trees

Spraying with a naphthalene acetic acid solution is said to keep ripened apples on trees for 10 days to two weeks, so they may be harvested all at once.

We were delighted to have so many of our parents, relatives and friends attend our carnival. The first attraction was the main show after which Miss Morberg introduced the queens namely Lorna Moe, Cheryl Burton, Carolyn Fosholm, LuAnn Smiih, Elaine Rodabl, Carol Mehrkens, Marlene Larson, Ione Larson. These queens were lovely - all wearing floor length gowns. Harold Nohre presented the crown to Cheryl Burton. Queen Cheryl was presented with a corsage of roses and mums and a gold cross Each of the attendants were presented with beautiful ribbon tied corsages made and donated by Mrs. Wm. Holst. They also were presented with gifts.

Irvin Larson received the door prize. The remainder of the evening was spent fishing, bingo, eating lunch, candy and pop corn

On Hallowe'en Day we all tried our luck at guessing the number of seeds in a pumpkin presented by Mrs. Arnold Sannes. LuAnn's guess was 455. The number of seeds was 437.

Carl Johnson sold his farm recently to Mr. and Mrs, George Preska and son David and daughter Kathleen of Park River N. D. They moved here last week. Mr. Johnson and son Forrest will stay with them until spring when they will move to their farm south of Holt.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Beaver Greenway tires of the domination of his sister over his niece, Carey Marsh. Mrs. Palmer, the sister, is Carey's grandmother and tries to keep the girl near her at all times. Greenway and his sister quarrel. Mrs. Palmer stumbles as she tries to rise and Greenway, moving to reach her, tumbles them both to the floor. Mrs. Palmer screams and Greenway, thinking her hysterical, empties a pitcher of water in her face. The searchers begin to close in on Thunderhead and his herd. Thunderhead makes sensational leap for freedom.

CHAPTER XX

It was a magnificient jump. His great body lifted easily, and then, in the air, seemed forced upward by a second leap of will and determination. Thunderhead could clear a jump of six feet. He couldn't clear this. But his feet were over. He clawed the rest of the way. He balanced on the top of it. He rolled over and turned a complete somersault, righting himself as he landed with a flashing of white legs and flailing of hoofs. He was on his feet! He was unhurt! He was away!

Collins went up the fence, puffing. Tim followed him. They got down into the corral and started moving around the edge of the bunched mares, looking for Jewel.

One after the other, men climbed over the fence into the corral. Dust and the hot smell of sweating horseflesh rose to Ken's nostrils. The mares were quieting down.

Carey's head came up over the top rail beside Ken. Her face was flushed with heat and excitement. Her linen hat was on the back of her head and damp tendrils of dark hair clung to her forehead. Her wide red mouth was open.

"Oh, Ken! Ken! Have you seen her?"

Ken shook his head. The nausea was getting worse. He jumped down from the fence, made his way around the corral, and with Thunderhead's halter and rope still on his arm, picked up the stallion's trail and followed it up to the woods. The trail was plain. If he had been on horseback he could have followed it at a canter.

He ran down the slope. A number of the mares had been brought out of the corral by their owners. His eyes scanned them quickly. There were the Stevens' mares and the two Palominos and Mr. Gildersleeve with Lady Godiva and three other black mares, but no mare that looked like the picture of Crown Jewel.

Mr. Greenway's face was longer, sadder, than Ken had ever seen it. "I am convinced," he said, "that she was internally injured in that fall from the freight car, and even though she was able to run away with Thunderhead, she died later. At the time it seemed to me a miracle that there should have been no injury after so dangerous a fall."

Rob answered slowly, "You may be right. It looks like it. The stallion would never have let her out of his band—unless she were injured or sick."

"That's right, Cap'n," said Tim.

Greenway turned to Carey, "Want to stay, Carey?"

Carey shook her head. She was almost swaying where she stood.

"It's — so — terribly — hot, Uncle Beaver."

He put his arm across her shoulders. "You've had enough, my dear. So have I." He turned to Rob. "McLaughlin, I think I'll pull out this afternoon—as soon as we can pack our things. Nothing to wait for."

"No—that's right—nothing," said Rob.

"You're not coming in now?"

Greenway took off his hat and held out his hand. The gesture was like a blow to Ken. They were saying goodby!

The two men shook hands. Carey began to cry again and put her hands over her face. She didn't seem to know what she was doing.

Rob Makes Plans To Kill Stallion

The Sheriff claimed that he could hit a moving target at three hundred yards with his Marlin thirty and every man in Westgate backed up his boast.

Rob picked up the gun and balanced it. The moonlight glinted on the blue barrel. He fitted the stock to his shoulder. The gun fell into position.

"It was a present to me," said Barrows. "It happens that I did a favor to the President of the Marlin Company without knowing it—tell ye about that some day. Anyway, he looked me up, said he'd like to give me a gun, the best gun they make. The plant's in New Haven. They sent me a circular with all the pictures of the different guns they make. I picked this 'un."

"It feels as if it would shoot itself," said Rob.

"It does. Sees, aims, drops on the target. Does everything but pull the trigger. I have to do that." He laughed.

"Give it here," said Ross. He balanced the gun. "Sure feels sweet," said he and passed it on. "Want to feel it, Ken?"

Ken tried the gun, handed it back to the Sheriff.

"Be sure you give us time," said Ross.

Rob lit his pipe and pulled at it. "There'll be plenty of time, I think. The stallion isn't going to get panicky."

Ken sat in his corner on the rock, holding the halter in his hands. He turned and twisted it. If it could be a magic halter . . . if it could draw Thunderhead's head in, the way a magnet draws a needle . . .

An excited whinny split the air. The four men stood up quietly. All the mares were on the alert, every body tense, every head turned northwest, every pair of ears sharply cocked.

"This is it," said Ken in a low voice, "We'd better go." He and Ross walked very quietly down through the trees toward the corral.

One of the mares, a large black mare of fine conformation, an unbranded mare, one of the ones who had not been subdued, was in a state of great excitement. It was she who had whinnied. Now, turning away from the fence, unable to keep still, she trotted up and down the length of it, then again put her head through the bars, sniffing frantically, ecstatically, and her wild, eager love calls rang out again and again.

The white stallion emerged from the trees and came cantering down toward the corral. He gave a fierce, triumphant cry, and every mare answered him. He shone silver white in the moonlight. The Sheriff cocked his gun, holding it loosely under his right arm.

"Wait," said Rob.

"Oh, sure," said Barrows.

They could see the inky black figures of Ken and Ross moving toward the corral. Now they were lost in its barred shadows.

The stallion galloped to the fence of the coral. The black mare was there to meet him. Their heads came together; their muzzles touched and clung; they breathed each other's breath, squealing softly.

Rob stood watching in a somber misery. To have to do such a thing! His hand slowly closed into a fist in his pocket.

"God! What's the matter with Ken?" he muttered. "Why doesn't he call him with the whistle? No—no—he's right—he wouldn't answer the whistle now—let them get this nuzzling over with first."

Now the stallion trotted along the fence, seeking some place to enter. Ken's whistle rang out. Again and again the soft trilling notes pulsed on the air and every horse was shocked into attentiveness.

Shot Kills Ishmael, Not Ken's Stallion

Ken stepped out where the stallion could see him. One hand held the whistle to his lips, the other was outstretched, the halter hung over his shoulder. Between whistles he called, "Thunderhead! Oh, Thunderhead! Come along, Thunderhead!"

He expected Thunderhead to hesitate, to advance toward him, to come close, perhaps to refuse the halter, but still to come close enough to smell him, but the horse did nothing of the kind.

He gave the wildest plunge Ken had ever seen. He wheeled, he tore away.

Ross's rope sang out and fell short. The stallion was a white streak, running away. Cursing, Ross pulled in his rope.

There was the crack of a gun. The white shape leaped in the air, the hoofs pawed at nothing, the horse crashed to the ground. Ken walked slowly toward it.

"I guess that did it," said the Sheriff.

"Good shot, Barrows," said Rob. He asked the Sheriff for a match. He took his time in re-kindling his pipe which had gone out.

"Go back!" said Ken viciously to Ross, who was at his heels. The little broncobuster stopped still. Ken did not know that as he reached the white mass lying on the ground he groaned.

Blindly he went down on his knees. He drew the head into his arms. Looking over the shoulder Ken could see the great wound and the dark stream welling from it. There was a spasmodic quiver, one deep sigh that answered his own, and all was over.

Ken sat there, staring. Staring at the muzzle which was not black as Thunderhead's was, but pink. Could a horse change the color of his muzzle? It was a long time before his mind really began to work. He examined the eyes, they were pink rimmed, white lashed. The ears—they were pink inside. Thunderhead had black muzzle, black eyelashes, the inside of his ears was dark. This was a true albino with no dark marking upon him anywhere.

Ken got to his feet and examined the horse all over. It was a stallion, about two years old.

Then he remembered. "Oh!" he said aloud.

Ross sauntered up to him. "What's up?" he asked.

The other men were coming. Ken walked to meet them. "It isn't Thunderhead," he said, "it's Ishmael."

"Ishmael!"

"Do you remember, when I rode Thunderhead in the Valley of the Eagles, there was one black mare with a little white colt? I told you all about it. She tried to run away from Thunderhead when he was rounding them up. I called them Hagar and Ishmael."

Rob Permits Mare To See Dead Colt

They examined the dead horse. The black mare, Hagar, neighed frantically.

"Gol-durn!" exclaimed Ross.

"Damnedest thing I ever heard of! Shot the wrong hoss, did I? I didn't know there was two like this in the country."

Rob was silent. Ken said, "He must have brought the black mare and her white colt with him when he left the valley last summer." The blood was pounding in his ears. Thunderhead was safe . . . Thunderhead was free . . . "He's a two-year-old," he added aloud. "You can see. He's not as heavy built as Thunderhead."

Rob straightened up.

"Might as well go on home, I guess," said the Sheriff.

Rob was sickened. "I'm going to let that mare out," he said, "we've killed her colt for no reason. Let her see the last of him."

Ken saddled Flicka and went for a ride. He rode out on the familiar road along the eastern ridge of the little valley west of town, then crossed it to the western side. No reason, any more, for avoiding that river bottom. The life had gone out of it. No more quietly browsing mares, no little dancing foals thrusting their pinhead hoofs into the soft loam.

The western ridge was unfamiliar to him. It was higher than the eastern and it was heavily timbered. He explored it until he was dripping with perspiration. Looking for water, he traced back one of the rivulets which fed the Spindle River and came upon one of those little pools, quite deep, perfectly transparent, fringed with grass and ferns and rocks which are often found half-hidden at the base of wooded mountains.

He dismounted, stripped and bathed.

The pool was fed by springs and very cold. Standing in it, the water, at its deepest, reached just to his neck. Looking down through the translucent brown color, he saw his white body, oddly fore-shortened. Motionless, he watched the ripples die and the water grow quiet.

He got out of the pool and lay basking in the sun until he was dry, then dressed himself. It seemed to him he would like a smoke. It was hard to have to wait until he was eighteen—nine more months; it was time he smoked. Where had he put his boots? He had set them on a near-by rock. He reached for them. One fell off the rock and he had to stand up to get it. Leaning over, he paused. Near the boot was a mark on the ground, a circle. It was shaped like a horse's hoof . . . it was a horse's hoof . . . big as a bucket . . . Pete's hoofprint. No horse but Pete had a hoof like that.

Ken's heart leaped. Jewel? . . .

AROUND THE HOUSE

To speed up the defrosting process in your refrigerator, remove the ice from the trays, fill them with boiling water and put them back in the freezing compartment.

When the rubber-covered dish drainer or skeleton tray alongside your sink gets old and sticky, apply shellac, varnish or ordinary paint. Let it dry thoroughly before you do the job (and after) to eliminate the sticking and prolong the life of the tray.

To blacken or polish a stove, here's a routine that gives it a good finish and makes it last. When rust and grease have been removed, rub the stove thoroughly with waxed paper. Then add a tablespoonful of strong leftover coffee and a few pinches of brown sugar to a can of your favorite brand of stove polish. Don't mix them up; just take a dab of all three with your brush each time and apply the mixture to the stove that way. The coffee and sugar on top of the polish will probably give out before the polish does, but you can add more as needed.

The above treatment will also combat stickiness in the gasket; but if the stickiness gets beyond this help, hold the gasket in place with a few strips of adhesive tape. Don't try to remove the tape later, though, unless you're getting a new gasket, because the old gasket probably will come off with the tape.

When the stove begins to look dull, but still doesn't quite need new polish, you can brighten it up by rubbing it occasionally with waxed paper.

If the tray under your freezing compartment is not wide enough to catch the chunks of frost when they fall, spread newspaper across it so that the paper extends a couple of inches beyond each edge of the tray. Or, remove the regular tray and put a slightly larger kitchen tray in its place during defrosting.

Before blackening or polishing a stove—especially if rust is present—go over it with sandpaper or emery cloth. If grease is on the stove, rub it first with a raw onion and then with newspaper.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Tells U. N. This Country Committed to Armament Program; Costs of Living Near Record High

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

TRUMAN:

Armament for Peace

President Truman, speaking before the United Nations general assembly on United Nations' day, told members of the world organization that the United States would prefer universal disarmament, but that this nation is committed to rearming because it is the only way to stop aggression.

The President used Korea as an example of what united effort by U.N. members can accomplish in stopping aggression. He termed the invasion of South Korea by Communist forces a direct challenge to the world organization.

As for disarmament and the solution to world problems, Mr. Truman said the U. S. was willing to enter negotiation, but only if all nations proved their good intentions. Such negotiation could only be carried on if there was concrete evidence of good intention and the open and free exchange of ideas between nations.

The chief executive said few acts in our time have met with such universal approval as the intervention of the United Nations in the Korea conflict.

It was significant that the President did not mention Russia at all during his speech as the chief threat to world peace. It was clear, however, to what world power he referred when he said the freedom loving nations of the world will continue to build up their armed strength, because they have no other choice.

LIVING COSTS:

Nears Record High

The latest government consumer price index reported the cost of living continued to move upward. The gain was ½ per cent from the previous month. The index stood 173.9, meaning 73.8 per cent above the 1935-39 average.

The government, however, was only putting into figures what the American housewife has known for some time. Low and fixed income families felt the pinch shortly after the Korean war began. The latest index figure was only .4 of a per cent short of the 174.5 high reached in August and September, 1948.

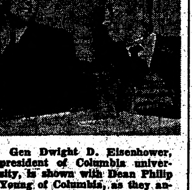
Even with the publication of these figures there seemed little possibility that the government planned any immediate action to stop the rising cost of living. In the average American city the housewife now pays $21.70 for a food basket costing $10 at the outbreak of World War II.

During August and September of this year housewives were paying 8.5 per cent more for meats, poultry, and fish, including 10.6 per cent for pork chops, 7.5 per cent for fish, and 4.4 per cent for eggs, 1.4 per cent for canned fruits and vegetables, and 2.6 per cent for beverages.

The government's price index is taking on increasing importance in American business economics as more and more contracts between unions and employers allow for wage changes as the index rises or drops.

However, this does not help old people or white collar workers living on fixed incomes.

Ike Says 'No'



Gen Dwight D. Eisenhower, president of Columbia university, is shown with Dean Philip Young of Columbia, as they announced the establishment of the "American Assembly" at the university, a convocation of representatives of business, labor, the professions, government and the university, to work out answer to critical problems facing the country. Ike repeated his "no" about running for President.

Headliners

Leon H. Keyserling, chairman of President Truman's council of economic advisers, speaking on the country economic problems, said: "We do not need as many or as tough controls as in 1944 because the transition of military activity is not nearly so rapid or so great."

Stuart Symington, economic-mobilization coordinator, also had something to say on the same question: "It begins to look as if everybody wants controls so long as the controls don't affect them."

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, speaking on the Founder's Day program at Carnegie Institute said: "Possibly my hatred of war blinds me so that I cannot comprehend the arguments they advance. But in my opinion there is no such thing as a preventive war."

PRAGUE:

Scene of New Plot

The foreign minister of Russia and the representatives of seven satellite states met in Prague to plot the next Communist move since the gamble in Korea must be written off as to a complete loss.

From that meeting came four demands to the western powers, but the free nations were more interested in what the Communists did not say than in the new demands.

This is what the Communist asked:

(1) That the governments of the United States, Britain, France and Russia should publish a declaration saying they will not allow the remilitarization of Germany, they will not allow Germany to become "involved in any plans of aggression," and will try to carry out the Potsdam agreement to "build a democratic, peace-loving Germany."

(2) That all restrictions hindering the development of Germany's "peace economy" be removed while a revival of German war potential should not be allowed.

(3) That there should be concluded "without delay" a treaty of peace with Germany which would renew the unity of the German state in harmony with the Potsdam agreement; that all occupation forces of the great powers be withdrawn from Germany within one year after a peace treaty is concluded.

(4) That on a basis of parity, representatives from east and west Germany should form a "Constituent Council" for all of Germany to prepare "the formation of a democratic sovereign government" for all Germany.

The West was not naive enough to believe that any agreement could be reached on Germany. Plans for rebuilding a strong western Germany and an European army continued in full force.

Western diplomats were asking themselves what new acts of aggression did Russia and her satellites cook up?

STASSEN:

Pravda Calls Him Silly

Harold E. Stassen, former governor of Minnesota, created a lot of interest with his letter to Joseph Stalin asking for a face to face meeting of Americans and Russians in an effort to "stop the drift toward war."

Stassen did not receive a reply from Stalin, but the official voice of Communist propaganda, Pravda, published an article calling him silly, crude, and ridiculous, among other things.

The article was, in fact, a flat rejection of the Stassen proposal. The writer made it plain that the Soviet government does not consider Stassen's letter worth a formal answer.

The article said in part: "Stassen demands no more, no less than a change by the Soviet Union of its policy. It is not difficult to see that Stassen is not only crude but also ridiculous in advancing this wild demand which excludes all possibility of a serious view of any degree of 'document' worked out by the president of Pennsylvania university in cooperation with veteran warmongers Eisenhower and Dulles."

The former aspirant for the Republican presidential nomination had little to say about the article. He indicated he would wait for a direct reply from Stalin.

FREEDOM BELL

Symbol of Freedom Rings in Berlin

The 20,000-pound freedom bell, symbol of the hopes of free men, arrived safely in Berlin after a night run through Communist dominated territory where Red agents reportedly had orders to delay it. The following day it was raised to the belfry of Berlin city hall.

Two days later millions of radio listeners throughout the world heard Gen. Lucius D. Clay, former military governor in Germany, dedicate the bell as a symbol of freedom and listened to it proclaim freedom to all mankind.

The broadcast touched off the most widespread and dramatic bell-ringing in history. Church and school bells throughout the western world picked up the freedom chimes and followed with clanging of their own bells.

AILING HOUSE

Question: I have aluminum siding on my house and I would like to paint it white. I understand some sort of "treat coat" should be applied first, so that the paint will adhere properly. Could you give me any information on this?

Answer: There is a special metal priming coat intended for this purpose. I cannot mention trade names in the column, but you may obtain information from the Architects Samples Exhibit, 101 Park Ave., New York 17.

Vanity

During the Twelfth dynasty vanity was sometimes a very expensive trait. Egyptian rulers of the time often admired their reflections in real silver mirrors that had handles of black obsidian adorned with solid gold.

What cigarette do doctors themselves smoke?
● Three nationally known independent research organizations put the question to 113,597 doctors. Doctors in every field of medicine were asked, "What cigarette do you smoke, Doctor?" The answers from this nationwide survey revealed that
MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS than any other cigarette!

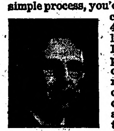
These plants would surprise most Minnesota people!

IF YOU'VE PICTURED iron-ore mining as a fairly simple process, you'd be surprised to see how times have changed. Today in Minnesota some 48 plants are at work concentrating low-grade ore. What's that? E. W. Davis, Director of the Mines Experiment Station at the University of Minnesota, can tell you: "As mined, this type of ore is not acceptable to the blast furnace because the iron content is too low and the silica content too high. The treatment is determined by the nature of the crude material. It may require crushing or washing to produce merchantable ore, or it may need jigging, grinding or sintering . . ."



Davis

IF YOU COULD TOUR a typical concentrating plant you'd be impressed at how man's ingenuity has made it possible to turn inferior material into very good ore.

Rocks are pulverized in huge crushers. Vibrating screens separate the fine material from the coarse. Water—by the millions of gallons—scrubs the sand from the ore.

All this, of course, runs into money. The electricity bill at a single plant may be $25,000 a month. The water used may come to millions of gallons a day. And the cost of hauling—by truck, conveyor belt and train—is staggering. For up to three tons of raw material must be handled to yield a ton of shipping product.

Yet Minnesota's ore producers needed no urging to step into processing of low-grade ore. They knew that here was true conservation—improving leaner ores to stretch out the life of high-grades . . . and at the same time, keeping Minnesota workers on the payroll.

In fact, what these producers now want to do is to swing further into ore processing. They want to tackle even leaner material—iron-bearing taconite rock, which could assure Minnesota a huge ore "manufacturing" industry for generations.

First, of course, they must know that the ore concentrates they produce will be low enough in cost—despite the extensive treatment required—to find a market. You can't force a steel mill to buy Minnesota ore now that large deposits of ore are being made available from other areas.

Minnesota people can help their iron ore industry expand—and put money in their own pockets—by insisting that this industry be treated the same as any other industry whose welfare is tied up with their own.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

A FAIR DEAL FOR MINNESOTA'S IRON ORE MEANS A GOOD DEAL FOR YOU

Holt School News

Dates are all set for the start of the 1950 Christmas Seal sale, it is announced by Mrs. Christine Peterson Christmas Seal Chairman for Holt.

"The 44th annual campaign to raise funds for fighting tuberculosis will begin Nov. 20 with mailing of Christmas Seals to families throughout the nation" Mrs. Peterson said. Seals are now sold entirely by mail, not by personal solicitation. On receiving a letter and Seals, each person can decide for himself how many he can buy or use."

"On Dec. 6 schools will have programs to acquaint children with the story behind the Christmas Seal, the dramatic story of a 44 year battle to conquer a killer." Mrs. Peterson said.

Finally, Dec. 25 marks the close of the 1920 campaign. "At that time we hope to have all returns in and hope we can say all people in Marshall county used the little stamps that mean better health for all of us." The chairman said.

Mrs. Peterson is serving as treasurer of the local Seal Sale. Other volunteer workers are Mrs. Emma Haagenson, Mrs. Thelma Ness and Miss Elaine Morberg.

TB—THE KILLER

No one is immune to TB. It may strike at any age. It kills at the rate of one person every 18 minutes, causes more than 40,000 deaths in our country a year. Help fight TB by supporting your tuberculosis association.

Buy and Use Christmas Seals

Annual Meeting of Naz. Church

The Annual Meeting of the Nazareth Lutheran Church and Ladies Aid will be held Friday evening Dec. 1, at 8 p. m.

It is urged that all pledges to the church be paid by November 25th and that the financial reports of auxiliary organizations be turned in for publication.

Nazareth Lutheran Church,
Myran Gunheim, Treasurer.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Paskewitz of St. Paul came up for the week end to get their grandparents Mr and Mrs, Wm. Paskewitz who will visit in the cities for some time.

TB Research

Research aimed at the discovery of a specific cure or preventive for tuberculosis is conducted in many laboratories throughout the country. Christmas Seal funds pay for this work which constantly adds to our knowledge about tuberculosis. This year 26 grants of Christmas Seal funds have been made to investigators to study the tuberculosis germ. Other work made possible through Christmas Seals includes tuberculin testing of school children, mass X-ray surveys, rehabilitation of patients, and a continuous program of education.

NOTICE

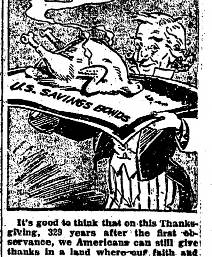
There has come an appeal to the local Church for help with the nationwide Thanksgiving week Clothing Drive conducted by Lutheran World Relief.

The need is great. This year will find millions of refugees facing the winter in worn out clothing.

Anyone having used clothing, shoes or bedding that they wish to give are asked to leave them at Gunheim's store by Friday Nov. 24 when it will be packed for shipment which must be made from here Dec. 25th.

Alf Movick, Chairman
Local Lutheran Welfare

Uncle Sam Says



It's good to think that on this Thanksgiving, 329 years after the first observance, we Americans can still give thanks in a land where our faith and freedom stand as firm as Plymouth Rock. It is our job to preserve these by assuring our own financial security, by making our present prosperity provide for our future. All it requires is the regular, automatic program of saving provided for you through the Payroll Savings Plan for the purchase of U. S. Savings Bonds. Enroll now where you are employed. —U. S. Treasury Department

Prize Livestock

Livestock owners bringing their animals home after competition in state and county fairs are advised to keep them apart from home herds for 30 days—just in case they may have picked up a contagious disease that is slow in showing up. The American Veterinary Medical association says there is always a chance that show stock may be exposed to infection in transit or while on the fair grounds, yet it may take three weeks before signs of illness become apparent. In the meantime, quarantining them protects the home herd from exposure.

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

The other day Cy Wright, (he's the Otter Tail Power Company vice-president now but he used to be a pole-climber himself) called me into his office and said: "Reddy, I guess you know about what happened up at Westhope, North Dakota, some time ago." I said, "Yes sir, I sure do. I spent four hours there trapped in a transformer."

"Well," said Cy, "this is hunting season and a good time to tell all the folks about the trouble you had up there." So here's the story, good people. One fine day last month somebody took a "pot shot" at an insulator on an Otter Tail pole and smashed it all to smithereens. The line fell to the ground spitting and crackling. Right away there was a short circuit that burned out a transformer at Souris over 20 miles away.

The damage amounted to about $1,500, but it could easily have cost $5,000. However, that isn't the point of the story. The point is that several hundred good Otter Tail customers were without electricity for a considerable length of time — just because someone was careless with a gun. Insulators make attractive targets — but think TWICE before you shoot at one. It may affect electric service for miles around.

You know, just looking at an insulator on a power-line pole, you would never realize how much work and expense there's connected with making electricity. Just take the big Otter Tail Power Company steam plant at Wahpeton, for instance, which is called Kidder Station.

It takes almost 8 cars of North Dakota lignite every day, 365 days of the year, to keep Kidder Station operating. And besides that, they have to keep a stock pile of lignite outside the plant — a reserve supply of about 300 cars, all the time. That's enough coal to warm all the coffee in Brazil!

And the unusual thing about it is that this coal has to be piled and packed just right or it will catch fire by itself! Well, they've got that problem solved, too. Here's a picture of the "solution" — a giant, rubber-tired mammoth called a "Tournapull." That's Art Amundson (if you can see him) at the controls . . . and he spends days on end just moving coal into piles and packing it down. This "D Roadster," as it's called, hauls 9 tons of coal as easily as you carry a bag of groceries! This same outfit is also used to move the lignite from stock piles to plant, too.

And how do you think it's controlled? I've got a hand in that, too. Steering, scraping, loading and unloading are all done by ELECTRICITY! Well, electricity solves most any problem, anyway. I see where a man in Memphis, working on a night shift, complained that changes in the weather disturbed his sleeping. So now he slumbers under an electric blanket with a 16-inch electric fan aimed at the bed!

Aid to Explorers

Rescue work in a helicopter forte. Notable was the one in 1945 when a U. S. coast guard helicopter, assembled at Goose bay, Labrador, rescued 11 Canadian airmen, one at a time, from a bleak Labrador hillside after conventional planes had repeatedly failed. Helicopters have become standard eyes of fleets operating in ice-choked waters.

Speedy Finish

In one British automobile plant seven men can paint 1600 car bodies a week because of a conveyor that moves the bodies down the length of the plant. Rotary cradles carry the bodies and allow them to be turned by the men wielding the spray guns so that they can apply the paint at the best working angle.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

As we get older, stress and strain, overexertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Getting up nights or frequent passages may result from minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or dietary indiscretions.

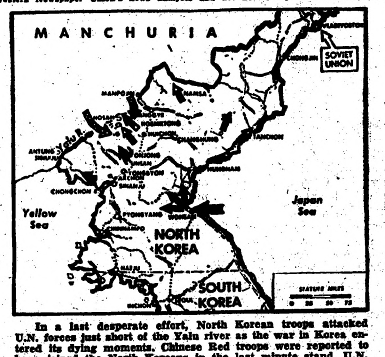
Attempt Made to Kill President; Master Defense Plan for Europe Reportedly Agreed on by Allies

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



In a last desperate effort, North Korean troops attacked U.N. forces just short of the Yalu river as the war in Korea entered its dying moments. Chinese Red troops were reported to have joined the North Koreans in the last minute stand. U.N. forces totaling nearly 200,000 men continued to push northward in the final phases of the struggle.

TRUMAN:
Escapes Assassination

For the first time in history an attempt was made to assassinate a president of the United States at his official residence. The plot came to an end in a blazing gun battle at the very steps of Blair House, the temporary White House.

The assassins were identified as Griselio Torresola, who died almost instantly of wounds, and Oscar Collazzo, seriously wounded, both of New York. The men were members of the Puerto Rican Nationalist party which started an uprising in Puerto Rico a few days before the attempted assassination.

Three policemen on duty at Blair House at the time of the attack were wounded. One of the guards, Pvt. Leslie Coffelt, 40, died a short time later in a Washington hospital. The other two were reported seriously injured.

According to best reports the two assassins approached Blair House, one from the east and one from the west. Collazzo opened fire first when within 10 feet of a policeman on duty at the steps of Blair House. Two other guards at posts near the steps opened fire on Collazzo.

Meanwhile, Torresola, within a few seconds of Collazzo's opening shot, opened fire in front of Lee House, which adjoins the Blair mansion on the westerly side.

Guards returned the fire and within seconds both would-be assassins were shot down.

Collazzo is reported to have told police that he and Torresola came to Washington "with the express purpose of shooting the President". On Torresola's body was found a letter and a memorandum both cryptic but indicative of conspiracy of the Nationalists to kill Mr. Truman.

The attack resulted in an immediate crack-down on the Nationalist party in Puerto Rico which has demanded independence of the United States.

The Communist party, afraid of being involved in the plot, immediately disavowed any connection with it and termed the attempt a 1950 version of the "Reichstag-fire frame-up in Hitler Germany."

TIBET:
Invasion Ordered

The Indian government which had tried to appease both the east and west in the current battle for freedom, received a rude shock with the official confirmation that Communist China had ordered her troops into Tibet.

India had thrown its weight behind the move to seat Communist China in the United Nations. With the invasion of Tibet, Prime Minister Pandit Nehru found himself in a difficult position. Red armies were at the border of India and it appeared likely that Nehru would be forced to review his policies.

If Communist China and Russia continue their present partnership in foreign policy and exploitation of China's natural resources, the disappearance of free Tibet will bring a formidable combination of Communist-powers to bear against non-Communist India.

Nehru finds himself now in a very unfavorable situation in the struggle for dominance in Asia.

Headliners

"The time has long since passed when the world can be stirred to hope by general phrases of the Soviet Union about disarmament and peace and German unity," Secretary of State Dean Acheson said in rejecting a Cominform proposal for a unified Germany.

"You can have all the glittering front that's left in Europe today. I've had enough," said Barbara Hutton, American heiress who had four husbands, three of them European.

"It is useful for the American government to show in practice that it is ready to help other people rathed than issuing propaganda as some other countries do," Premier Tito of Yugoslavia said in announcing his drought-damaged country would get U.S. aid.

EUROPE:
Master Defense Plan

The will and a plan for the defense of Europe against any aggression was made known to the world when the Atlantic pact nations reportedly agreed on a unified army of about 50 divisions, strong fleets in the Atlantic and Mediterranean and a mighty air armada based in Britain and on the continent.

The plans called for General Dwight D. Eisenhower to be named supreme commander of the collective armed forces. The defense plan would reach full force as soon as possible and not later than 1953, it was reported.

The plan is a further step in the armament for defense program outlined in a recent speech by President Truman. The western world has accepted the belief that Russia understands only armed strength.

In the new plan, the U.S. would furnish five to 10 divisions, more than half the warships, all strategic bombers, and five to 10 groups of tactical fighter planes. France reportedly would provide 20 to 28 divisions; Britain about five; Belgium, Luxembourg, and the Netherlands five to 10, and Italy about 10.

Britain would contribute a smaller number of warships than the United States, but would share the major responsibility for sea power.

CASUALTIES:
Climb to 26,701

The terrible price of war was brought home to the American people with the announcement that U.S. casualties in Korea numbered 26,701.

The latest tabulation included 3,683 killed in action, 18,682 wounded and 4,337 missing in action.

The official figure on total deaths was 4,125. In addition to those killed in action, it included 442 who died of wounds and listed as missing those whose capture by North Koreans and subsequent death was confirmed.

The army casualties totaled 23,140, the navy 252, the marine corps 3,133 and the air force 176.

Army Reveals Point System for Reservist

Veterans of World War II are not likely to forget the point system by which armed forces were demobilized when the conflict came to an end. Now a point system is again in the news.

The army announces a new system to determine which enlisted reservists—among those on active duty—would be sent overseas. The system would be used also to determine the order in which additional enlisted reservists were ordered to active duty.

At the same time the army announced that no further mandatory calls to duty would be issued to enlisted men of its reserve corps, except for a limited number of specialists in intelligence and medical corps. Reserve officers will still be called.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Thunderhead's tremendous leap enables him to claw his way up and over the wall. Righting himself after a somersault resulting when he hit the ground, he is off with a flashing of white legs and flailing hoofs! The searching party fails to find Crown Jewel and Greenway fears she was injured and has died. Greenway and Carey Marsh says goodbye to Ken and the others. Believing Thunderhead will return to the mares after dark, preparations are made to shoot him. A white stallion appears and is shot—but it isn't Thunderhead. Is it Ishmael, Hager's colt, come to be with his mother. Ken finds Old Pete's hoofprint.

CHAPTER XXI

"Plain as day!" he suddenly yelled, hastily pulled on his boots, mounted Flicka and put her on the trail. The marks were conspicuous in the soft loam of the mountainside. Now he was sure. Two horses had traveled this way, one was Pete, the other a tall horse with long legs and small hoofs. Where these two had pushed through the brush, weaving in and out among the largest trees, they had made a sort of path which Ken and Flicka easily followed.

It was late that night before Ken and his father went up to the room they shared, Ken more silent than usual because the thoughts and emotions that surged within him were conflicting; one silenced the other. He had led his father and Mr. Greenway and Collins out to inspect the tracks on the mountainside, and the little town buzzed with the results of that inspection. The English filly was not dead; she had run off with Pete. Ken was undoubtedly a hero, but—he had not seen Carey again.

Rob did not start to undress but sat down in one of the rocking chairs and lit his pipe. Ken sat down in the other. Windows were wide open, the flimsy white curtains hung straight in the lifeless air. The room was left in darkness because of mosquitoes.

Rob began to talk. There was a note of jubilation in his voice. "Damned glad you found those tracks! Changes the whole picture. I was beginning to feel pretty small—bringing the gang out here to get Mr. Greenway's filly, costing him a lot of money, and going back with nothing and less than nothing!"

"Now," said his father, "you can load up here with everything you need in the way of provisions. I won't leave until I've seen you off. Take plenty. You might catch her in a week, or it might be six. Let's see — what's the date today? The twelfth, I think."

"Ken—even though it leaves me in a fix, yet I'm glad it wasn't Thunderhead that was killed. Don't misunderstand me—if I had to do it again, I'd do the same thing, and if it was Thunderhead he would be killed if he couldn't be caught, yet, all the same, I'm glad it wasn't. Bad enough to have that other one lying dead out there. Ishmael."

Rob States Certainty Of Ken Finding Horse

Rob placed his hand on Ken's knee and gave it a little squeeze. "It's all turned out pretty well, son, and now the rest is up to you. I know you can do it. I'm counting on you."

Ken's eyelids swept up, he broke into a vivid, charming, self-conscious smile. And Rob felt a pang, for the look in the dark blue eyes was like Nell's.

Again the curtains blew straight into the room. A rising wind swished around the building and there was a sudden crack of thunder.

"Here it is," said Rob, going to the window. Ken followed him.

Half the sky was clear and luminous, the bright moon in the zenith. The other half was a heavy bank of dark clouds that were moving rapidly, shoved up from the northern horizon.

"Goodbye to Pete's tracks," said Ken dolefully.

The clouds were churning, one layer against another layer, great chunks torn loose by the wind and sent flying. Lightning split it again and again and thunder rolled and tumbled in the mountains. Northward, the storm was beating on the earth—rain—snow—they could not yet tell what it was. But even as they watched, the bank of clouds was shoved up and across the zenith, over the moon, and the world was inky black, crackling about their ears.

"Hail," said Rob into Ken's ear, as the familiar sharp patter hit the streets and the roof of the hotel. "You're in luck."

"Thank goodness," said Ken, knowing that hail would not erase the horses' tracks but freeze them into a hard mold.

"Better come to bed," he said, "this'll be over in a few minutes."

"I will," said Ken, but he did not move. The storm had swept away all his dread and given him, instead, exultance. The luck was with him. Thunderhead had not been shot, Jewel had not died. Neither of them was lost beyond recapture. Nor was the prospect of his visit to the Greenways entirely hopeless. If his luck held and he caught up with the horses soon, there were still weeks of summer to spend with Carey and with the horses on the practice track of the Blue Moon.

Ken was on the trail of Pete and Jewel. Crossing it, near where he was now sitting by his campfire, was another trail. He knew those hoofprints. They were unusually large, the prints of a horse who had never worn a shoe. There were cracks in the edges, several big pieces of the hoof chipped off. These were hoofs that took care of themselves, had never been pared or shaped, good broad hoofs to carry a great weight without stumbling. They were Thunderhead's hoofs, and they went north. And Pete's and Jewel's, after having come from the corral in a northerly direction for fifteen miles or so, had then swung around, following a tiny creek. They were now heading due east.

Thunderhead's trail was the older. He had not crossed their trail, they had crossed his. If it had been the other way around, Thunderhead might have overtaken them. Did horses actually follow trails, smelling it out on the ground the way a dog does? He decided that they don't, they just sniff the air, smell horses from a great distance, know whether they are mares or stallions. He wondered if Thunderhead, from where he was now, somewhere to the north, could smell Pete and Jewell, off there to the east, and decided he probably could not.

Ken Starts on Hunt To Find Thunderhead

The wind was cool. The hailstorm had broken the heat. Ken's eyes went to the line of bluish white behind the highest of the timbered mountains. Snow—fairly thick snow. There must have been a fresh fall up there when it hailed down here. Now and then the smell of it was on the wind. Now and then a current of air poured down, like a cold tide, delicious and oddly challenging.

Ken flung his slicker on the spongy turf, a blanket over it, another rolled up for his head, took off his boots and lay down, covering himself with a third blanket.

In the morning he stood naked on the banks of the stream, rubbing himself with his bath towel after having bathed in the miniature waterfall. His teeth were chattering, air and water were cold and the sun was not yet up over the mountains. There was not a cloud to be seen. It was going to be a glorious day. He was in haste to be gone.

He fed himself and his horses, packed Sparks carefully and was off to the north on Thunderhead's trail.

After that he made better time, picking up the tracks of his quarry often enough to be confident. On the fifth day, he came out of the hills to the edge of the North Platte River. It brawled across his path, wide, shallow, rapid. Thunderhead's tracks led into it. He had crossed that river.

Ken made his camp under an overhanging cliff, back from the river a few hundred feet. Over him and on all sides of him was the forest, sighing in the rain.

He was wet through. He fed the horses and hobbled them. He changed his clothes, hanging his wet things around the fire on sticks. The saddle lay on the ground steaming in the heat from the fire. He cooked and ate his supper, cleaned up, put the things away, all in a state of confusion and misery which was almost panic.

Five days.

Five days to get here; if he started right back, five days to reach the trail of Pete and Jewel where he had left it — and what would these ten days and the winds and rains have done to those tracks? And if he went on and followed Thunderhead as he had planned to, what would this downpour have done to his trail? It might take him a day—two days—even to find it again.

He had wasted time enough hunting for Thunderhead . . . Forget him . . . forget the race . . . forget all that he had so wanted for himself . . . Do what he ought to do. Return to Pete's trail and go after him and Jewel and bring back, for Carey and for Mr. Greenway, the thing his father had made himself responsible for. His father's parting words sounded in his thoughts again. They were clear enough. Had he been crazy—going off on this wild goose chase when his duty so clearly led him elsewhere? There was even the horrible thought that, due to this long detour, he might not succeed in coming up with Pete and Jewel in time. This hit him a blow, and with it came a premonition that that was just the way it was going to be. He was going to fail, and serve him right if he did.

Damp and unhappy, he crawled into his blankets and slept the night through. The morning was dark and drizzling. Once again he climbed the little eminence near by and swept the flats across the river with his binoculars. Thunderhead might be near. Silly to turn and go back, when perhaps just a half-day's travel, just a few hours, separated them! He called at the top of his lungs, he whistled, he looked minutely, steadily, until his eyes were watering with strain. No sound but the urgent brawling of the river. No movement but the swaying of the trees, the low, windswept clouds.

Crown Jewel With Foal Sired by Thunderhead

It was a despairing goodby look which he cast upon those flats and hills. He put all thought of Thunderhead, of the visit to the Blue Moon, of the steeplechase, away, and ran down the hill, saddled Flicka, and headed back the way he had come.

The wind again. The forest roared, a battery of pine cones pounded the earth, and Ken, his thoughts drawn outward, lifted his head and listened. There was power! An endless wild sweep of power! His eyes lit up, his lips parted, smiling. All alone there on the edge of the forest he was listening for God.

There came a sharp sound, a series of cracks, louder and louder, and suddenly the deep crash and great groaning of a tree going down. Prickles went up Ken's spine and he felt his scalp contracting. If you really listened for the voice of God, you began to hear it in strange places and strange ways.

Jewel was with foal by Thunderhead and her time was near.

August, and the summer heat pouring down the valleys. Grass, belly deep and still green, untrod, unseen by man, touched only by the winds that bent it into billows, marking it with undulating ripples of light.

How good it was to eat! Sweet, succulent, rich, tubular mountain hay, exactly what was necessary to provide milk for a foal.

It was not easy to find at this time of year, when, on the plains, the grass had turned dry and brown. Only in the mountains were there these small valleys, occasional clearings, little pockets of lushness which the horses could find by smell, one patch leading to the other.

They grazed as they walked, one step at a time, the enormous mottled bay and the trim English filly, a black satin beauty with a clean-cut diamond of pure white between her eyes and a long pear-shaped pendant hanging from it.

Pete's great size, inherited from Clydesdale, Suffolk Punch and Belgian ancestors, gave him a threatening appearance, but this was contradicted by the spirit of gentleness and humility which emanated from him, especially from the gaze of his large brown eyes. These beautiful eyes and the heavy black forelock above them gave him the look of a wondering, friendly child, peering out from under a dark bank.

Jewel had grown taller, her mane and tail were wild and sweeping and full, but her head was the delicate, beautifully drawn head of an English thoroughbred, and her body and long legs had the fine lines of a dancer.

Both horses were in top condition, their coats shining with a glossiness which would have been the envy of any groom.

They had been grazing all day on a tundra where sheep had grazed before them. The place was saturated with the smell of them. Here, on the lower edge of the tundra, the forest came to meet it, and it was into the forest that Jewel had disappeared.

Sing Something Purple

The fact that music can bring certain colors to mind has long been recognized by psychologists. Two of them, Henry S. Odbert and Theodore F. Karowski, found that—out of 148 college students —39 per cent were able to "see" a color or colors while listening to music. Of the number, 53 per cent were able to associate a color and 31 per cent felt a color response. Newton related colors to the diatonic scale in this manner: Do, red; re, orange; mi, yellow; fa, green; sol, blue; la, indigo; and si, violet. Attempts have been made to fashion color organs and other devices to express the correlation of color and music.

'We Dairymen Know We're Better Off... THANKS to LAND O'LAKES'

. . . says BEN L. MYERS, Pequot Lakes (Minn.) Creameryman

"We're thankful every day—not just at Thanksgiving—that we're in the LAND O'LAKES organization," says Mr. Myers, a buttermaker at the Co-op Creamery Association, Pequot Lakes. "LAND O'LAKES gives us a world of help. Take field men, for example. They help us and our farmer-owners to turn out the quality that gets really top prices. We get good honest grades on our butter. Because LAND O'LAKES does our marketing, we plant men have more time to spend on boosting quality and seeing that every farmer gets a square deal. Everybody wins . . . with LAND O'LAKES." That's what so many creamerymen and dairy farmers say. What about you? Are you marketing through LAND O'LAKES? It pays!

We Ask That "Fares" Play Fair

Judge Cunningham was telling about a taxi ride he took over to the County Seat last week. The cab was all littered with cigarette butts, plus candy and gum wrappers. This annoyed the Judge and he spoke to the driver about it.

To his surprise the cabman answered right back. "Don't blame me," he said "Fast as I clear this taxi out, the fares just mess it up again. I like a clean cab as well as anybody, but a man has to have some co-operation!"

Judge figures the fellow was in the right, and maybe we ought to do a little campaigning with the public. I agree with him—that's why I'm writing this article.

From where I sit, it's important for us to remember the fellow who's going to get in the cab after we leave it. Because he pays the same as we do, he's got the same right to a clean, comfortable ride—just as he has the same right to enjoy the beverage of his choice (be it coffee, beer, lemonade, or what have you).

APPRECIATION

I wish to express my sincere appreciation to the voters of Marshall County for re-electing me to the office of County Auditor to a sixth term. I feel elated for the confidence you have had in me during the past years and will endeavor to merit your continued confidence in the future by doing the job entrusted to me honestly and to the best of my ability. Thank you all.

Sincerely,

Levi G. Johnson

To The Voters of Marshall Co.:

I am sincerely thankful for the very generous indorsement given me in the General Election last week.

As your Register of Deeds, I shall always endeavor to serve all of the people of this county, to the very best of my ability, in a friendly, prompt and efficient manner.

Sincerely yours,

H. M. Hanson.

To The Citizens of Marshall County:

I am very grateful for the kind support given me in the general election of 1950.

During the term that I have been privileged to work for the public, it has been my earnest desire to serve in a friendly and cooperative manner. I shall continue to do so to the very best of my ability.

Sincerely yours,

John O. Pearson,
Co Superintendent

Ringbo Rambles

Nov. 25 - Saturday evening, there will be moving pictures

The Ringbo Ladies Aid will have their annual meeting at church Friday afternoon Nov. 24 at 2:00 p. m. Lunch will be served

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Simmons and children from Randen were visitors Monday at the Carl Knutson home.

Dinner guests Sat. at the P. Becklund home were Mr. and Mrs. Axel Becklund and family of Newfolden.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Swenson called at the Pete Sorters Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Ose were luncheon guests at the Christ Engen home Sunday. They also took Mr. and Mrs. Engen to church for the forenoon service.

Farmers Union Local of Ringbo put on a very interesting movie Friday evening. Very sorry we got the film too late to announce in the paper. Myran Gunheim very kindly came out with his projector to show us the film. The picture was Farmers Union All State Camp of Colorado and was very educational. Roger Skoglund also gave a talk on his three day visit at the state convention at Wilmar and several songs were sung by a group of girls. Vivian Strandquist gave a reading. Lunch was served at the close of the meeting. There will be no meeting the second Friday of December. Watch this column for dates of next meetings.

Mr. and Mrs. Palmer Udstrand of Minneapolis, who spent several days last week visiting relatives at Thief River Falls, Newfolden were supper guests at the Pete Sorter home Wednesday. Later that evening they were guests at the Ingvald Johnson home. Palmer showed movies to the group who came to help Marshall Johnson celebrate his birthday. Those present were the honored guest, his parents and brother and sister, Walfrid and Sylvia, and Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Johnson and family, James Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Herb Johnson and Darold and Catherine. The movies were much enjoyed. Mrs. Johnson served a delicious lunch.

Student From Seminary to Hold Services Sunday

The Nazareth Lutheran congregation has two events scheduled that will be of great interest to the people of the community. On Sunday a student from the Seminary at St. Paul will be here to conduct services.

On Sunday evening December 3rd. Rev. J. M. Erickson of Grygla will show movies to supplement the regular program.

Good Sportsmens Club Program

A large crowd was present at the Sportsmen's Club meeting last Friday evening. Robley Hunt gave a very interesting talk on the goose pen project in Mud Lake Game refuge. Mr. Kusmac, and two other gentlemen from Thief River Falls entertained the group very well with colored slides and descriptions of a deer hunting trip with bows and arrows.

Plans were completed for a fox hunt which was held last Sunday.

Next meeting will be in the form of a Christmas party and will be held Dec. 8th.

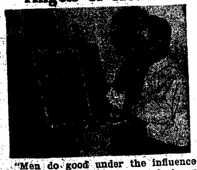
Angels of Health



"Men do good under the influence of good angels." Andre Dugo, designer of the 1950 Christmas Seal, said this old belief inspired him to use the winged children on this year's tuberculosis Christmas Seal. The artist stated that he purposely made the child-angels look like an average trio of American children. Christmas Seals pay for a year-round program to protect children from tuberculosis. They make possible: tuberculin testing of school children, X-ray surveys and a continuous program of health education.

Annual Meeting of Naz. Church

The Annual Meeting of the Nazareth Lutheran Church and Ladies Aid will be held Friday evening Dec. 1, at 8 p. m.

It is urged that all pledges to the church be paid by November 25th and that the financial reports of auxiliary organizations be turned in for publication.

County Historical Society To Be Reactivated

Plans to reactivate the Marshall County Historical Society and increase it's usefulness to all residents of the county will be formed at a public meeting of the Society at the Court House in Warren on Friday, December 1 at 2 p. m.

Arrangements for the meeting were made by present officers of the society and others at an informal meeting in the office of Judge Nels M. Engen Monday afternoon. Judge Engen is the Society president with O. M. Mattson, vice president, Mrs. Synneva G. Knapp, secretary and Mrs. J. J. Pagnac of Stephen, treasurer. Others in attendance Monday were A. E. Strandquist H. M. Hanson and J. W. Sands.

The historical society has been inactive since 1942, and suspended operations because of the war However, the society has done some work at collecting facts about Marshall county men who served in the armed forces during the war, compiling face sheets about every individual who entered the services.

Mrs. Murnett Johnson, Mrs. Myron Johnson and Mrs. Orlin Ness attended a wedding shower for Mr. and Mrs. Julius DuFrane at the Jacob Matero home near Middle River Thursday evening.

Mrs. Adolph Stienhauer was given a parcel shower at her home Friday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Curtiss Lindberg and daughters of Karlstad and and Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Bratteli were Sunday dinner guests at the Torrance Lillevold home at Grygla.

An Appeal for Clothing

There has come an appeal to the local Church for help with the nationwide Thanksgiving week Clothing Drive conducted by Lutheran World Relief.

The need is great. This year will find millions of refugees facing the winter in worn out clothing.

Anyone having used clothing, shoes or bedding that they wish to give are asked to leave them at Gunheim's store by Friday Nov. 24 when it will be packed for shipment which must be made from here Nov. 25th.

Story of Three Bears

The three bears of storybook fame had a few other uninvited guests before "Goldilocks" came. The first visitor to the bears was a fox. Later, Robert Southey, noted English writer, made an old woman the intruder. But, the English people, who took the story to their hearts, substituted the pretty, little girl.

Canine Anemia

Simple anemia produced by bleeding can be tolerated by the adult dog continuously during its entire life history. Simple hypoproteinemia can be maintained in adult dogs for years. However, double depletion—anemia plus hypoproteinemia—is a severe strain on the dog and can be tolerated continuously only for a few months.

Goldenrod

The goldenrod (genus Solidago) is claimed by more states as their official state flower than any other American plant. Nebraska adopted the goldenrod by legislative act in 1895, with Kentucky following in 1926 and Alabama in 1927. North Carolina claims the flower by "common consent."

Damage from Meteorites

In all the thousands of years that meteorites have been plunging earthward, no catastrophic strike has ever been known in a settled area. Likewise, there are no authentic records of a direct hit on any human, and relatively few accounts exist of damage to property.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

The foal is born to Jewel and Old Pete, stands by as guard and protector. A wolf pack attacks the mare and her foal and Old Pete rushes in to battle the wolves. He is successful for awhile, but the attackers finally bring him down, mortally hurt. Ken arrives as the wolves are finishing off Old Pete and drives them away with his rifle. Old Pete expires with his head in Ken's arms. Ken, getting his first sight of Crown Jewel, is amazed at her beauty. He wishes that Carey could be with him at the moment. Once again Thunderhead comes within reach of Ken, but the youth fails in his efforts to recapture the horse and is disappointed again.

CHAPTER XXIII

He studied his predicament, every possibility. He did not know that a slight, steady quivering had taken him. There was nothing he could do tonight. But tomorrow — yes, tomorrow — if he were good for anything, if he were any use at all, if his boasted power over Thunderhead had an iota of truth in it, he must catch the stallion, saddle him, bridle him and bring him home between his knees.

It was about three in the afternoon of a grey day when Nell mounted Redwing and cantered through the meadows to the field where Rob and the men and the hay crew were putting up the last of the hay. Already, in the other meadows through which she rode, the big stacks were piled, shaped, tamped down, covered with weighted tarps.

When Rob stopped by the next pile and the men began to pitch, Nell said, "Got a wire from Ken."

Rob's face changed expression quickly. He looked at her. She nodded her head smiling, "He's got 'em!"

"Both of them?"

"Yes."

Rob let out a yell which made the horses jump.

"Look out!" exclaimed Nell, grabbing Redwing's reins.

"Well, that ends my troubles," said Rob with a big grin.

"Anything else in the wire?" he asked.

"Well, yes," admitted Nell, "Something that has me worried."

"Shoot," said Rob with narrow eyes.

"The wire said, Am riding Jewel, Leading Flicka and Sparks. Could not catch Thunderhead. He is following. Look out for Banner and mares."

"I'll put Banner in the stable." Nell nodded. "He won't like it but that's the safest. If you just put him in the corral, Thunderhead would jump into it and murder him."

"And I'll put the mares and colts in the Six Foot pasture. He can jump into it and do whatever he has a mind to, but they can't jump out."

Rob Again Tells What Thunderhead Faces

"Are they all bred?" asked Nell.

"Every one of 'em." There was vicious satisfaction in Rob's voice. "None of that wild-devil blood in my horses, thank you!" He swung up into the saddle, and Nell watched the way her quiet horse gathered himself and began to prance and champ the bit as he received the charges of Rob's powerful will.

Rob put his heels into the horse's side and Redwing jumped. He was off. Rob's head turned over his shoulder. "Be careful, Nell—"

"Goodby," she yelled to the figure that was flying down the field.

They discussed it again later that night when she had pacified Pearl for dinner being so late, when she had combed the hay out of her hair, tucked Penny into bed, and when Rob was washed and tidy but no less angry. "If he simply couldn't catch him, what could he do? Because the stallion would follow the mares, and Ken had to bring the mares, didn't he?"

"He had a gun, didn't he?" said Rob coldly.

It was understood this summer, over there at Westgate, that since the stallion could not be caught, he'd have to be killed. Ken agreed to it.

"It wouldn't have been agreed to if I'd been there," said Nell so belligerently that Rob had to turn his face away to hide his amusement.

"Well, it'll have to be agreed to by everyone," said he, as they left the table. "He'll be caught and gelded, or he'll be shot. We're not going on year after year with this nuisance."

They composed the telegram to Beaver Greenway and sent it off.

"Be easy on him now—" was the last thing Nell said to Rob when they saw Ken leading his cavalcade up the road, across the Green and on up to the stables. Thunderhead was not with him. There was no sign of Thunderhead.

But there was too much seething in Rob's mind for him to hold it in long. That evening, when Jewel had been stabled safely in the cowbarn with her foal, out of reach of Banner, when Flicka and Sparks had been put out to pasture to forget their responsibilities, to rest, to roll and ease their tired muscles, when supper had been eaten and Ken's story told, Rob burst out.

"Why the devil did you have to wait till the last minute to wire me and let me know what I was up against?"

"Because," said Ken dully, "I kept thinking that I'd get him yet. I kept trying to all the time."

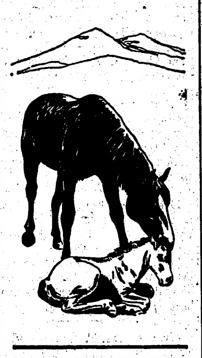
"What's the last time you saw him?"

"Back there—before we got to Beaufort I heard some horses neighing far away. That's when he disappeared and I haven't seen him since."

"Stealing some more mares!" said Rob savagely, "I'll be hearing about that next!"

Ken made no answer. It was what he himself had been dreading.

Halfway up the Saddle Back, an ancient pine thrust its gnarled trunk up through a split and caverned rock to spread wide branches over the hillside.



Jewel and her beloved foal were home.

Here sat Ken the day after the Greenway's arrival at the ranch. A pink and blue sunrise glowed in the east but Ken had eyes only for the gate far below him which led from the pasture out onto the County Road. She would come through that gate if she came at all. He was just waiting for the moment when he and Carey would be together alone.

He sank back on the turf, laid one arm across his eyes and, in his mind, began the proposal. She would know, of course; she would meet him halfway; it would be easy —they would just go into each other's arms. It went on—he didn't know just how long it went on, but suddenly he sprang to his feet.

There she was, standing before him in her slim grey jodhpurs and white shirt. "Oh, what a climb!" She flung herself down where she had been lying.

"You — found my — note," said Ken, reseating himself, and he had difficulty in not stuttering.

"Of course! Under my door! I'm here, aren't I?" And Carey lay back on the hillside and looked up into the branches of the tree. "Why do you call it the Monkey Tree? I don't think it's a monkey tree."

"We call them that. There are only a few of them left on the ranch," said Ken. "Mother made up a rhyme—

Twisted old pine tree, I can plainly see
That you are just making a face at me.
You wink one eye and you bend one knee
And that's why I call you the Monkey Tree.

Everything Seems Gone Wrong to Ken

Carey laughed and Ken was furious at himself for reciting the rhyme. Everything was going wrong. To be talking about the pine tree was just as bad as to be talking about horses. Ever since the Greenways had arrived it had been horses, horses, horses. He had been obliged to describe every mile of his journey, all of his adventures. Then Carey had ridden Jewel and put her over the jumps. Then it went on all evening about the races Jewel would win. He hadn't even been able to think about his proposal. And now, when the time had come for it, it wasn't happening.

"How come your Grandma let you come without her along?" he asked casually.

Carey sat up quickly and turned solemn eyes to him. "Do you know something? I've found out that Grandma only gets sick when she can't get her own way!"

"What did we tell you!"

"She didn't want me to come here with Uncle Beaver. And when I said I wanted to, she began to complain of her rheumatism and I had to get hot compresses for her."

"But you came anyway!"

Carey nodded but with a little chagrin at herself. "It was Uncle Beaver who stood up to her. I didn't dare."

Ken lay there, silently, while Carey chatted about the episode. He felt quite desperate, because, no matter what turn the conversation took, it did not seem to get any closer to the proposal.

Around them the colors had changed. Brilliant green lay upon the hillside, the air was golden, the pink clouds were now puffs of snowy cotton. The hour was passing. The day—the last day was here! How could Carey be so oblivious?

Her face turned to him as he leaned closer, hardly knowing what he was doing, and he was aware, for a second, of the excitement in her eyes before he was too close to see them.

When Carey at last pulled away, she sat up and took a scrap of blue linen and pressed it to her eyes.

"I don't know why I'm crying!"

Ken sprang up and walked off a little distance. He stood there a few moments, then returned and flung himself down beside her and held out his arms. A deep sigh went through him — they clasped each other closely.

At last a sort of peace came to both of them. He held one of her hands, drawing it over his eyes and cheeks. One of her fingers traced the line of his eyebrow. Then across his cheekbone. That small finger was experimenting with this new intimacy. Now and then they turned their two heads until their lips just lightly touched.

"Carey," he said and his voice was a little husky, "I've been waiting so long for this."

Ken Urges Carey To Resist Grandma

"I knew it was coming, didn't you, Carey?"

She nodded, examining a bit of quartz she had picked out of the grass.

"We're engaged now, Carey."

Carey had no answer to this.

"Aren't we?"

There was just the least doubt on her face.

He sat up abruptly. "How can you look like that! You know we're engaged!"

"We—e—ll, engaged—yes, I guess so, but—"

"Well, that means married, doesn't it? Engaged to be married?"

"Ken, it just seems so far away. Too far even to think of. And then you know, there's Grandma—I can't believe she will ever allow it.

Ken exploded. "That is just what I was waiting to hear! Your're not going to let her interfere between us, are you Carey?"

"Us is the one thing she really wants to interfere with. I guess she knows, Ken."

"Knows what?"

"Knows—this—"

"This" was another clasping of arms, another kiss. Then Ken took both her hands and held them tight. "Promise me you won't let her ruin our life."

"I don't know what you mean."

"I mean—interfere with our marriage."

"But, Ken, we're too young yet anyway."

"I know it! Damn it!" he said. I'll have to go to college next year, I suppose. Carey, if you would only go to college too, in the East, then we could see each other all the time, go to dances together, and be really engaged."

"I want awfully to go to college," said Carey wistfully, "but there it is. Grandma again. She doesn't want me to. She begins to get asthma at the very idea!"

"What does your uncle say?"

"He says it's entirely up to me. If I want to, he'll back me up." She drew a deep breath. "If I only dared!"

At this revealing remark, Ken's heart became tender. She was really afraid of the selfish old woman who had ruled her all her life. "You will now, Carey. Now you've got me. It'll make a difference." He kissed her again, and Carey, indeed, was beginning to feel that it would make a difference.

There was a creek to cross, and at last Ken had his chance. He caught her up and held her across him, grinning at her, feeling that he really had her at last.

Carey laughed at him and put one arm around his neck. As he waded with her, she gave a few squeals of fear. Ken stopped midstream—put one foot on a high rock propping up his knee and sat her upon it. He laughed, teasing her. "Now, I've got you!"

Carey looked at him demurely, refusing to be frightened.

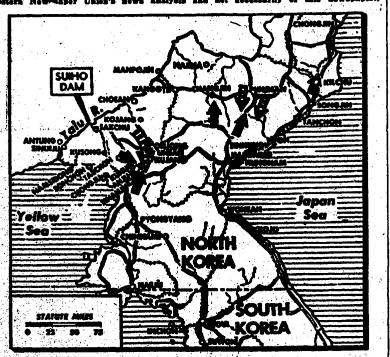
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Republicans Make Sweeping Gains For Both Senate and House Seats; Korean Situation Is Called Serious

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



An estimated 80,000 Chinese Communists are reported driving southward (broken arrows) in an attempt to split U.N. forces. U.N. troops withdrew, although some units were surrounded and cut to pieces. Observers report the Korean situation serious.

ELECTION:

Republicans Gain

Taking the administration by surprise, the Republican party made sweeping gains in the senate and house in one of the most hotly contested national elections in years.

As final tabulations were being completed, observers believed that the Democrats would retain 49 senate seats and the Republicans would have 47. To all practical purposes the Republicans will have a working majority in the senate and will control legislative voting with the aid of rebellious southern Democrats.

In the house the Republicans made sweeping gains, but not enough for control.

Most startling aspect of the election, in the opinion of most observers, was the defeat of such men as Democrat Sen. Millard E. Tydings of Maryland and Sen. Scott Lucas of Illinois.

Lucas was the Democratic majority leader in the senate and Tydings was a strong supporter of the administration and the state department.

In Ohio, Sen. Robert A. Taft won a resounding victory over the labor-Truman purge attempt. Foreign policy played an important part in Taft's campaign and the results of the battle may shake the foundations of the Republican party. Some observers saw Taft's victory as a plain indication that the people were not happy with the administration's foreign policy.

The administration took another blow in Connecticut. Republican John Davis Lodge ousted Fair Deal Democrat Chester Bowles in the governor's contest. Democrat Sen. Brien McMahon, however, was re-elected.

In New York, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, twice-defeated Republican nominee for president, won a third term as governor of that state. The governor's running mate, Lt. Gov. Joe R. Hanley, was defeated by Sen. Herbert Lehman. Here again was evidence of that trend where neither Republicans or Democrats were able to sweep all offices. This split across party lines was evident in many sections of the country.

In California, Republican Gov. Earl Warren, seeking a third term, won re-election over James Roosevelt, son of the late President. Rep. Richard M. Nixon also defeated Democrat Helen Gahagan Douglas in a senatorial battle.

In a congressional fight that attracted nation-wide attention, American-Labor party Rep. Vito Marcantonio of New York, the only minor party representative in the house, was unseated by a Democratic-Republican-Liberal coalition formed for the sole purpose of beating him. Marcantonio's foes charged that he followed every twist and turn of the Communist party line during his service in the house.

As final tabulations were compiled, observers agreed that Democratic control of the senate and house was so slight it did not constitute a safe working majority. As a result, the next two years will see a number of bitter battles on legislation and much of it being passed or killed by incredible small margins.

Headliners

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey added a marathon television show to his list of political-campaigning devices. He had Mrs. Dewey on the show with him a while. He asked her, "Why don't you take your hat off." She replied: "Because my hair's a mess. Why do things like this happen just when I need a permanent?"

"The Communists committed one of the most offensive acts of international lawlessness of historic record," Gen. Douglas MacArthur said in his report on Chinese intervention in North Korea.

George Bernard Shaw, Irish author and wit, who died at the age of 94, for years had kept the world in a whirl with his use of words. Here are some Shavianisms: Success—"The secret of success is to offend the greatest number of people;" Truth—"The truth is the one thing nobody will believe;" Love—"Sir, there are two tragedies in life. One is to lose your heart's desire. The other is to gain it."

KOREA:

Situation Serious

The war in Korea which seemed on the verge of complete victory for the United Nations forces took a dangerous turn with the invasion of Chinese Communists. Political observers termed the situation serious, including Gen. Douglas MacArthur, the U. N. commander.

According to available reports, between three and six Chinese divisions crossed the boundary between Manchuria and Korea and went into battle beside the North Koreans. The immediate military result was a withdrawal of U. N. troops south, in some instances as much as 50 miles.

MacArthur summed up the situation by reporting that the North Korean army was finished as a fighting force in October by the inflicting of 335,000 casualties. This included 135,000 Reds who were captured.

His communique on the situation said: "In the face of this victory of U.N. arms, the Communists committed one of the most offensive acts of international lawlessness of historic record . . ."

There are available in Manchuria about 300,000 troops— veterans of the Chinese civil war—which could be thrown into the battle immediately. Another 300,000 are believed to be either in Manchuria or North China.

The dangerous question now facing the free nations is what attitude the Chinese will take to MacArthur's charge that "alien Communists" have entered the war.

Whether the Communist world is prepared to take this colossal step is a secret, most probably locked in the depths of the Kremlin.

If the Communists are ready to take this risk it may mean the start of World War III and the end of the world as we have known it.

OFFICIAL CENSUS

U. S. Population Now 150,697,316

As of April 1, 1950, there were 150,697,316 persons in the United States. That is the official count as recently released.

This represented an increase of 19,028,068 since the 1940 census.

In the last 10 years there has been a considerable shift in the concentration of the population. As a result seven states will gain a total of 14 seats in the house of representatives; nine states will lose that many seats. The reapportionment will take effect in the congress convening in 1953, assuming the 435-seat total of the house is not changed in the meantime.

Congress could change the membership total of the house if it wished, but most observers believed this unlikely.

How hard can you hit a taxpayer?

A PERTINENT POINT about iron ore taxes recently came from the typewriter of Editor George Perham of Range Facts (Virginia). "Those who want to hit the mining companies still harder," he wrote, "apparently do not realize that a heavier tax toll will hit the people as well. They close their eyes to the constantly-diminishing ore reserves on the Mesabi. Already, ore producers are preparing for the processing of taconite, which contains about half the iron content of the regular run of ore. Extraction of the iron will be very costly. Good sense prompts the question of whether capital will go into such costly enterprises in a state where the politicians keep raising the tax . . ."

Perham

IT'S ONLY HUMAN to want somebody else to pay taxes. Yet it's true, as Mr. Perham knows, that a policy of constantly jacking-up ore taxes can bring about an awful letdown.

For one thing, a higher tax RATE doesn't always mean a greater tax REVENUE. If higher taxes discourage ore producers from developing the leaner ores, they could actually LESSEN the tax take.

- CONSIDER JOBS. Today the ore industry provides thousands of good-paying jobs. And studies show that every thousand men on mine payrolls account for the support of 7,500 people, including the breadwinners engaged in supplementary activities, and dependents.
- CONSIDER BUSINESS. Ore mines purchase all sorts of materials, products, services: timber and typewriter paper, electric power and flashlights, truck fleets and gasoline. Countless Minnesota firms all over the state fill these needs.
- CONSIDER AGRICULTURE. Miners are good eaters—and they, with their families, eat up millions of dollars' worth of food each year. This great demand helps farmers in every part of the state.

For better or for worse, Minnesota and its great iron mining industry are, in effect, married. Unjust ore taxes hurt not only the ore producers, not only the miners, but all Minnesota people. FAIR ore taxes are in the best interests of all Minnesotans.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

American Thanksgiving

"Lord, 'tis Thy plenty-dropping Hand that soils my land, and giv'st me for my bushels sown, twice ten for one."
Robert Herrick.

Centuries ago, the Pilgrim Fathers set aside this day to give simple thanks to God for the bountiful harvests in the fields.

On this Thanksgiving Day, 1950, amidst a troubled world, we give thanks not only for our wealth of soil and of industry, but more for our "American Way of Life" . . . which means a wealth of freedoms. Every day in every year we enjoy personal liberties that only a Democracy can grant.

It is only fitting that we set aside one day to give thanks that we are citizens of a prosperous and free America.

Tax Collections New High

Tax collections in Marshall county reached a new all time high for the period of June 1 to November 1 this year when they totaled $357,228.08 or an increase of $4,994.43 over a similar period in 1949 when collections totaled $352,233.55.

Figures for November tax collection settlement were completed last week in the office of P. E. Kvikstad, county treasurer Warrants in payment of monies collected for the various taxing units including townships, villages, schools and the state are now being prepared in the office of County Auditor Levi G. Johnson and will be distributed later this month or early in December.

October was the biggest tax collection month in the history of Marshall county with residenents paying $288,486.95 on county property with payments up to November 1, 1950 totaling $26,412.56 in comparison to $18,815.05 up to November 1, 1949. This represents a gain of $7,597.51.

Sea Scouts Go to Sea

Aboard Ship: The Scouts learn—and they play.

An ocean voyage aboard a freighter with an opportunity to roam about the ship from the bridge to the engine room is something Sea Scouts the world over dream about but few ever accomplish. However, a group of Venezuelan Sea Scouts recently had such a dream and made it come true.

Their leader, a young Captain in the Venezuelan Merchant Marine, agreed to accompany them if the voyage could be arranged. The Scouts decided to try. They went to officials of the Grancolombiana Line which operates freighters between United States ports and Venezuela, Colombia and Ecuador. Line officials were enthusiastic about helping the Scouts in their training and offered to transport the group free of charge on a round trip between New York and Maracaibo.

One of the line's most modern frieghters, the "Ciudad De Maracaibo," was chosen so that the Scouts could inspect the newest equipment. Under the guidance of their own leader, Capt. Melean, and ship's officers they learned how the equipment worked, and many shipboard duties landlubbers never learn. Their biggest thrill was locating another vessel by radar.

The Scouts covered a lot of ground. They attended a baseball game, placed a wreath at the statue of South America's Liberator, Simon Bolivar; attended a party in their honor, and even broadcast to South America over the Voice of America.

They had some trouble, because most of them spoke only Spanish. However, the Venezuelan consulate furnished each boy wih an identification card. The plan worked, too. Five of the Scouts were returned to their hotel in police cars.

Highlight of the stay was a party given by the Girl Scout Council of Greater New York. There the boys learned American dances. Then they showed the Americans some Venezuelan cowboy dances and taught them South American songs—even their own version of Boogie-Woogie.

The Scouts made a big hit with everyone and their visit accomplished a double purpose. It was a valuable experience in Scout training and the Scouts had served as ambassadors of good will between their country and ours.

Effective Cough Syrup, Mixed at Home for Economy
No Cooking. No Work. Real Saving.
Here's an old home mixture your mother probably used, and is still one of the most effective for coughs due to colds. Once tried, you'll swear by it.
Make a syrup with 2 cups granulated sugar and one cup water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.
Now put 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of cough medicine, and gives you about four times as much for your money. It keeps perfectly and tastes fine.
And you'll say it's really excellent for quick action. You can feel it take hold swiftly. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, helps clear the air passages. Thus it makes breathing easy and lets you get restful sleep.
Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action on throat and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if not pleased in every way.

Nurse Tells How Hadacol Was So Helpful To Her
Supplied Vitamins B1, B2, Iron and Niacin Which Her System Lacked
Mrs. Jennie Lee Adele, 412 N. 27 St., East St. Louis, Ill., a nurse, says she wishes she had found out about HADACOL sooner because since taking HADACOL she feels so good. Mrs. Adele was suffering a deficiency of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron which HADACOL contains.
Here is Mrs. Adele's own statement: "I have been a nurse for over 14 years. My food never seemed to agree with me. I heard one day how so many folks were being helped because of HADACOL. I tried it and after 3 bottles I could tell a big improvement. Now I eat anything I want—sleep well and I am full of energy."
WHY HADACOL Gives Such Fine Results
HADACOL does not bring just symptomatic relief. HADACOL now makes it possible to actually relieve the cause of aches and pains in the shoulders, legs and arms, certain nervous disturbances, and a general run-down weakened condition due to deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron in your system. HADACOL not only supplies deficient systems with extra quantities of Vitamins B1, B2, Iron and Niacin but also helpful amounts of important Calcium and Phosphorus—elements so vital to help maintain good health and physical fitness.
Why These Vitamins and Minerals Come In Liquid Form
There's a very good reason why HADACOL comes in special liquid form. These precious Vitamins and Minerals are more easily and quickly absorbed into the blood stream this way—ready to go right to work. A big improvement is often noticed within a few days.
Don't Be A 'Doubting Thomas'
After reading Mrs. Adele's wonderful experience with HADACOL—how can you doubt that this great new nutritional formula will help you if your system lacks Vitamins B1, B2, Iron, and Niacin?
What HADACOL did for Mrs. Adele, it can do for you if you're troubled with aches and pains in the shoulders, legs and arms, certain nervous disturbances, insomnia when due to an upset stomach, stomach distress and a general run-down weakened condition due to such deficiencies.
So what are you waiting for? Don't you see that HADACOL is the kind of product you need—the kind you should buy and the kind you should start taking immediately!
Sold On A Strict Money-Back Guarantee
HADACOL even helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to course through your body, carrying these great health-building elements to every body organ. No wonder HADACOL helps you feel wonderful.
Be fair to yourself! Give yourself a break if you have such deficiencies! Why continue to drag yourself around—a burden to yourself and your family—when relief may be as close at hand as your nearest drug store if you suffer a deficiency of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron. This great HADACOL is inexpensive, too—costs only a small amount a day. Trial size, only $1.25. Large family or hospital size $3.50.
If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 hospital economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied.—Adv.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Foreign Policy May Be Big Issue When the 82nd Congress Convenes; Slight Advance Made in N. Korea

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

G.O.P. VICTORY:

The Battle Is Underway

The echo of the G.O.P. victory in the November national election had not subsided before another voice was heard on the national scene. It was a Republican chorus of "fire Acheson" and a hint of congressional reorganization. The battle began for greater G.O.P. power in the coming session of congress.

On the domestic scene, Republican leaders opened fire on what they called the "grave inflationary situation." This was not believed to mean price controls for the benefit of the American housewife, however.

Senator Wiley of Wisconsin, fresh from a re-election victory, said: "It is a national tragedy the way prices of military items have been allowed to leap since the Korean conflict started." Controls were expected to be along this line.

There were indications also that a new investigation of Communist influences in government would be launched by Republicans when the next congress convened.

Notice was also served on the Democrats that Republicans will insist upon advance consultation on foreign policy steps.

And Sen. Robert A. Taft, now the acknowledged "big-wig" of the Republican party, made it clear he would like to hang Acheson's scalp to his belt when he stated: "I haven't the slightest confidence in Acheson's judgment."

To most observers it was clear the Republican party had launched an all-out campaign for control of the U.S. government. The final battle will be fought with the ballot box in 1952.

KOREA:

The Battle Continues

While the world speculated about China's ultimate aims in Korea, the battle continued.

Reports from the scene were confused. Military observers estimated as many as 90,000 Chinese Communists fighting in North Korea, but said United Nations forces continued slow advances behind smashing air attacks.

Meanwhile, a Chinese delegation was invited to the United Nations to hear the charge of aggression in North Korea lodged against them by the United States.

Many observers believed they had found the one main reason for China's action in North Korea. It centered around the great North Korean power plants along the Manchurian-Korean Yalu river boundary.

The Chinese Reds apparently were willing to fight to protect them. The reason being that the mighty hydroelectric plants strung across the neck of North Korea produced 2,681,180 of Korea's 3,132,727 kilowatt hours. An undetermined amount of that power going into Manchuria, the great center of China's heavy industry.

With this in mind, Chinese forces plunged into North Korea and forced United Nations troops to withdraw from the area. Since the Chinese have constructed a "Maginot Line" below the vital plants and will put up a determined defense when U.N. forces reach the area again.

Mao Tze-tung does not want that power shut off. Although the Russians looted much Manchurian productive equipment during their postwar occupation, what is left is China's chief hope for industrialization. And the Communist party line says industrialization is the answer to China's historic poverty.

Greatest Upset

Vincent Impellitteri (right) scored the greatest upset of the recent election. He was turned down by the Democrats as a candidate for the mayor of New York. He ran on his own, defeating Democrats, Republicans and Independents.

Headliners

Sen. Robert A. Taft has held several press conferences since his astonishing election victory. On one occasion he said, "Only an idiot would be an isolationist today." This was in reply to the label so often applied to him. On another occasion he said, "Unquestionably some of this sacrifice is necessary to protect us against the real threat of Soviet aggression. But the facts ought to be clearly brought before the people, and they must be satisfied in their own minds that the sacrifice is essential. If they are convinced by fair arguments, they will make any sacrifice to assure the freedom of America."

The long awaited message from Tibet, appealing to the U. N. to rescue her from Chinese Communist invaders arrived at Lake Success. It said in part: "Tibet will not go down without a fight, though there is little hope of a nation dedicated to peace resisting the brutal efforts of men trained to war." That quotation seems to express the view of world history today.

CRIME:

Dwarfs the 20's

To those who remember the "roaring twenties" and such gangs as the Capone boys, Senator Kefauver, chairman of the senate committee investigating crime, made a shocking announcement.

The senator said that "organized crime in the country today would make kindergarten play out of the operations of the Capone boys" and that the influence of crime on public official is "very sinister and very great."

He went so far as to say that his committee had the facts to prove that well-organized and "tough" groups of criminals are operating throughout the country with "interlocking ownership between all groups."

He said the racketeers are corrupting public officials and law enforcement officers, and are putting their money into "so-called legitimate businesses" in which they use racketeering methods.

Kefauver's reasons for the continued prosperity of crime agreed with those of most observers: Local public indifference to stopping the rackets.

Kefauver's nation-wide study is aimed at strengthening federal laws to block the way for organized crime. Such laws would include interstate ban on the shipment of gambling devices, more control over the wire services, strengthening of the postal laws, and amendments to the internal revenue laws which would "require real bookkeeping."

Gamblers and racketeers now cheat the United States out of hundreds of millions of dollars a year in taxes.

CORN BELT:

Rural Vote Counts

Leaders of both major parties have spent considerable time since the election trying to read the future from the election results. One obvious conclusion was drawn. The major battle ground for the 1952 election will be in the midwest corn belt.

As most voters remember, Truman won the 1948 election because three Midwest states jumped from their traditional G.O.P. column to the Democrat side. They were Ohio, Illinois and Iowa. Had any two of these states voted for Dewey in 1948, he would have been elected.

In the recent election, however, the rural vote returned to the Republican ledger. Two factors may have influenced the switch in the farm voting: a tendency for farmers to return to their traditional Republicanism when times are good and to vote Democratic only when their prices and incomes are declining, and, apparent dissatisfaction with foreign policies of the administration.

For these reasons the farmers of the Midwest will find themselves the target of both Republican and Democratic candidates in 1952. The Republicans will attempt to increase their gains and the Democrats can be expected to launch a full-scale attack to retake command. It might even be said that the farmers of the midwest will elect the next president of the United States.

CROP REPORT

Farmers Assured of Fourth Largest Crop

October weather assured farmers of their fourth largest recorded crop output and gave them a fine start on perhaps a record volume in 1951, the agriculture department reported.

The department said this year's crop volume—topped by a bumper corn crop of much better quality than had been anticipated — would nearly equal the average of the last five big years and be surpassed only by yields in 1946, 1948, and 1949.

The corn crop was estimated at 3,105,000,000 bushels or about 13 million less than was forecast in the previous report.

The department of agriculture said conditions were virtually ideal for maturing and harvesting this year's crop in most parts of the country.

JUST JESTING

Yes Indeed

"Which was the greater of the two," asked the History Professor, "Caesar or Hannibal?"

The student replied: "If we consider who Caesar and Hanibal were, and ask ourselves which of them was the greater, we must decidedly answer in the affirmative."

Same Boat

"Did you pass your exam?"

"Well, it was like this—you see—"

"Shake! Neither did I."

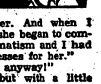
GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara



The foal is born to Jewel and Old Pete stands by as guard and protector. A wolf pack attacks the mare and her foal and Old Pete rushes in to battle the wolves. He is successful for awhile, but the attackers finally bring him down, mortally hurt. Ken arrives as the wolves are finishing off Old Pete and drives them away with his rifle. Old Pete expires with his head in Ken's arms. Ken, getting his first sight of Crown Jewel, is amazed at her beauty. He wishes that Carey could be with him at the moment. Once again Thunderhead comes within reach of Ken, but the youth fails in his efforts to recapture the horse and is disappointed again.

CHAPTER XXIII

He studied his predicament, every possibility. He did not know that a slight, steady quivering had taken him. There was nothing he could do tonight. But tomorrow — yes, tomorrow — if he were good for anything, if he were any use at all, if his boasted power over Thunderhead had an iota of truth in it, he must catch the stallion, saddle him, bridle him and bring him home between his knees.

It was about three in the afternoon of a grey day when Nell mounted Redwing and cantered through the meadows to the field where Rob and the men and the hay crew were putting up the last of the hay. Already, in the other meadows through which she rode, the big stacks were piled, shaped, tamped down, covered with weighted tarps.

When Rob stopped by the next pile and the men began to pitch, Nell said, "Got a wire from Ken."

"Both of them?"

"Yes."

Rob let out a yell which made the horses jump.

"Look out!" exclaimed Nell, grabbing Redwing's reins.

"Well, that ends my troubles," said Rob with a big grin.

"Anything else in the wire?" he asked.

"Well, yes," admitted Nell, "Something that has me worried."

"Shoot," said Rob with narrow eyes.

"The wire said, Am riding Jewel. Leading Flicka and Sparks. Could not catch Thunderhead. He is following. Look out for Banner and mares."

"I'll put Banner in the stable."

Nell nodded. "He won't like it but that's the safest. If you just put him in the corral, Thunderhead would jump into it and murder him."

"And I'll put the mares and colts in the Six Foot pasture. He can jump into it and do whatever he has a mind to, but they can't jump out."

Rob Again Tells What Thunderhead Faces

"Are they all bred?" asked Nell.

"Every one of 'em." There was vicious satisfaction in Rob's voice. "None of that wild-devil blood in my horses, thank you!" He swung up into the saddle, and Nell watched the way her quiet horse gathered himself and began to prance and champ the bit as he received the charges of Rob's powerful will.

Rob put his heels into the horse's side and Redwing jumped. He was off. Rob's head turned over his shoulder. "Be careful, Nell—"

"Goodby," she yelled to the figure that was flying down the field.

They discussed it again later that night when she had pacified Pearl for dinner being so late, when she had combed the hay out of her hair, tucked Penny into bed, and when Rob was washed and tidy but no less angry. "If he simply couldn't catch him, what could he do? Because the stallion would follow the mares, and Ken had to bring the mares, didn't he?"

"He had a gun, didn't he?" said Rob coldly.

It was understood this summer, over there at Westgate, that since the stallion could not be caught, he'd have to be killed. Ken agreed to it.

"It wouldn't have been agreed to if I'd been there," said Nell so belligerently that Rob had to turn his face away to hide his amusement.

"Well, it'll have to be agreed to by everyone," said he, as they left the table. "He'll be caught and gelded, or he'll be shot. We're not going on year after year with this nuisance."

They composed the telegram to Beaver Greenway and sent it off.

"Be easy on him now—" was the last thing Nell said to Rob when they saw Ken leading his cavalcade up the road, across the Green and on up to the stables. Thunderhead was not with him. There was no sign of Thunderhead.

But there was too much seething in Rob's mind for him to hold it in long. That evening, when Jewel had been stabled safely in the cow-barn with her foal, out of reach of Banner, when Flicka and Sparks had been put out to pasture to forget their responsibilities, to rest, to roll and ease their tired muscles, when supper had been eaten and Ken's story told, Rob burst out.

"Why the devil did you have to wait till the last minute to wire me and let me know what I was up against?"

"Because," said Ken dully, "I kept thinking that I'd get him yet. I kept trying to all the time."

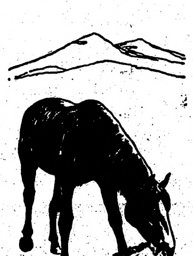
"What's the last time you saw him?"

"Back there—before we got to Beaufort I heard some horses neighing far away. That's when he disappeared and I haven't seen him since."

"Stealing some more mares!" said Rob savagely, "I'll be hearing about that next!"

Ken made no answer. It was what he himself had been dreading.

Halfway up the Saddle Back, an ancient pine thrust its gnarled trunk up through a split and caverned rock to spread wide branches over the hillside.



Jewel and her beloved foal were home.

Here sat Ken the day after the Greenway's arrival at the ranch. A pink and blue sunrise glowed in the east but Ken had eyes only for the gate far below him which led from the pasture out onto the County Road. She would come through that gate if she came at all. He was just waiting for the moment when he and Carey would be together alone.

He sank back on the turf, laid one arm across his eyes and, in his mind, began the proposal. She would know, of course; she would meet him halfway; it would be easy —they would just go into each other's arms. It went on—he didn't know just how long it went on; but suddenly he sprang to his feet.

There she was, standing before him in her slim grey jodhpurs and white shirt. "Oh, what a climb!" She flung herself down where she had been lying.

"You — found my — note," said Ken, reseating himself, and he had difficulty in not stattering.

"Of course! Under my door! I'm here, aren't I?" And Carey lay back on the hillside and looked up into the branches of the tree. "Why do you call it the Monkey Tree? I don't think it's a monkey tree."

"We call them that. There are only a few of them left on the ranch," said Ken. "Mother made up a rhyme—

> Twisted old pine tree, I can plainly see
> That you are just making a face at me.
> You wink one eye and you bend one knee
> And that's why I call you the Monkey Tree.

Everything Seems Gone Wrong to Ken

Carey laughed and Ken was furious at himself for reciting the rhyme. Everything was going wrong. To be talking about the pine tree was just as bad as to be talking about horses. Ever since the Greenways had arrived it had been horses, horses, horses. He had been obliged to describe every mile of his journey, all of his adventures. Then Carey had ridden Jewel and put her over the jumps. Then it went on all evening about the races Jewel would win. He hadn't even been able to think about his proposal. And now, when the time had come for it, it wasn't happening.

"How come your Grandma let you come without her along?" he asked casually.

Carey sat up quickly and turned solemn eyes to him. "Do you know something? I've found out that Grandma only gets sick when she can't get her own way!"

"What did we tell you!"

"She didn't want me to come here with Uncle Beaver. And when I said I wanted to, she began to complain of her rheumatism and I had to get hot compresses for her."

"But you came anyway!"

Carey nodded but with a little chagrin at herself. "It was Uncle Beaver who stood up to her. I didn't dare."

Ken lay there, silently, while Carey chatted about the episode. He felt quite desperate, because, no matter what turn the conversation took, it did not seem to get any closer to the proposal.

Around them the colors had changed. Brilliant green lay upon the hillside, the air was golden, the pink clouds were now puffs of snowy cotton. The hour was passing. The day—the last day was here! How could Carey be so oblivious?

Her face turned to him as he leaned closer, hardly knowing what he was doing, and he was aware, for a second, of the excitement in her eyes before he was too close to see them.

When Carey at last pulled away, she sat up and took a scrap of blue linen and pressed it to her eyes.

"I don't know why I'm crying!"

Ken sprang up and walked off a little distance. He stood there a few moments, then returned and flung himself down beside her and held out his arms. A deep sigh went through him — they clasped each other closely.

At last a sort of peace came to both of them. He held one of her hands, drawing it over his eyes and cheeks. One of her fingers traced the line of his eyebrow. Then across his cheekbone. That small finger was experimenting with this new intimacy. Now and then they turned their two heads until their lips just lightly touched.

"Carey," he said and his voice was a little husky, "I've been waiting so long for this."

Ken Urges Carey To Resist Grandma

"I knew it was coming, didn't you, Carey?"

She nodded, examining a bit of quartz she had picked out of the grass.

"We're engaged now, Carey."

Carey had no answer to this.

"Aren't we?"

There was just the least doubt on her face.

He sat up abruptly. "How can you look like that! You know we're engaged!"

"We—e—ll, engaged—yes, I guess so, but—"

"Well, that means married, doesn't it? Engaged to be married?"

"Ken, it just seems so far away. Too far even to think of. And then you know, there's Grandma—I can't believe she will ever allow it.

Ken exploded. "That is just what I was waiting to hear! Your're not going to let her interfere between us, are you Carey?"

"Us is the one thing she really wants to interfere with. I guess she knows, Ken."

"Knows what?"

"Knows—this—"

"This" was another clasping of arms, another kiss. Then Ken took both her hands and held them tight. "Promise me you won't let her ruin our life."

"I don't know what you mean."

"I mean—interfere with our marriage."

"But, Ken, we're too young yet anyway."

"I know it! Damn it!" he said. I'll have to go to college next year, I suppose. Carey, if you would only go to college too, in the East, then we could see each other all the time, go to dances together, and be really engaged."

"I want awfully to go to college," said Carey wistfully, "but there it is. Grandma again. She doesn't want me to. She begins to get asthma at the very idea!"

"What does your uncle say?"

"He says it's entirely up to me. If I want to, he'll back me up." She drew a deep breath. "If I only dared!"

At this revealing remark, Ken's heart became tender. She was really afraid of the selfish old woman who had ruled her all her life. "You will now, Carey. Now you've got me. It'll make a difference." He kissed her again, and Carey, indeed, was beginning to feel that it would make a difference.

There was a creek to cross, and at last Ken had his chance. He caught her up and held her across him, grinning at her, feeling that he really had her at last.

Carey laughed at him and put one arm around his neck. As he waded with her, she gave a few squeals of fear. Ken stopped midstream—put one foot on a high rock propping up his knee and sat her upon it. He laughed, teasing her. "Now, I've got you!"

Carey looked at him demurely, refusing to be frightened.

WHEN SLEEP WON'T COME AND YOU FEEL GLUM
Use Chewing-Gum Laxative—REMOVES WASTE...NOT GOOD FOOD
● When you can't sleep—feel just awful because you need a laxative—do as MILLIONS do — chew FEEN-A-MINT.
FEEN-A-MINT is wonderfully different! Doctors say many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy . . . you feel weak, worn out.
But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that weak, tired feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel fine, full of life! 25¢, 50¢, or only 10¢

Yes, this Thanksgiving season, CARL JACKSON, turkey raiser and dairyman of Brainerd, Minn., gave credit to LAND O'LAKES for helping build up the farming business. "By selling through LAND O'LAKES," he says, "we know we get everything we can—a square deal every time—the best average prices year-in and year-out." He sells milk from 16 cows through the Farmers Co-op Creamery, LAND O'LAKES plant at Brainerd. He got his turkeys from the LAND O' LAKES hatchery at Aitkin and raised them on LAND O'LAKES feeds—"best on the market." So Mr. Jackson knows what he's talking about when he boosts his LAND O'LAKES organization. Take the word of your neighbors —and market the LAND O'LAKES way.

Check Your Chest

"Check Your Chest—Make Sure You Are Safe from TB." This is today's most popular slogan in the fight against tuberculosis. More than a million and a half Minnesotans have been X-rayed in mass surveys throughout the state since the all-out program started to X-ray all residents of Minnesota. Funds raised through the sale of Christmas Seals help make possible this program to discover tuberculosis early.

Decorating Duplicators

In addition to being useful and durable, the finish on the duplicating machines used in offices must have an attractive appearance and must remain presentable over a long period of time. This finish must have good adhesion and a reasonable degree of flexibility. It should not be a "dust-catcher" and must lend itself to easy cleaning.

THE GOOD OLD DAYS WEREN'T GOOD ENOUGH!

Ever long for the "good old days" . . . fragrant, fresh baked bread and pies on the old wood range — getting out of bed on crisp November mornings and dousing your face in icy water from a pewter pitcher . . . the family gathered round the kerosene lamp, father with the paper and mother with her mending.

Yes, it's fun to look back . . . but when it comes to trading that new electric stove for Grandma's old wood range . . . or electrically heated hot water for that pitcher and basin . . . or the GOOD LIGHT we enjoy today for the old oil lamp -- Well, they're just pleasant memories, aren't they?

Electricity is your symbol for better living!

'Face Lifting' Brings Old Pastures Back To Thrifty Growth

PURDUE University agronomists recommend a "face lifting" in September for old, rundown, weedy permanent pastures. A good renovation program supported by liming and the use of commercial fertilizer can bring a pasture back to lush, vigorous production, they say.

First step in the program is a soil test for acidity and applications of limestone as needed.

The job of making a seedbed on an old sod can be satisfactorily done with a disc harrow or field cultivator, the agronomists say. The operation can be eased considerably by working the soil in one direction and then working it crosswise.

New grasses can be seeded any time in September. Timothy and smooth brome grass are excellent grasses to supplement blue grass. How much these grasses increase pasture output depends on the legumes to be used in the mixture and the amount and analysis of fertilizer used. The agronomists say that a good legume seed mixture to use per acre is two pounds of red clover, three pounds broadleaf trefoil and a quarter pound of Ladino clover.

The agronomists stress that a good application of commercial fertilizer is essential in pasture renovation. They recommend adding 400 pounds per acre of 0-20-10 or 0-20-0 fertilizer at the time of seeding. The phosphate and potash fertilizer helps get the seeding off to a good start, provides nutrients the legumes need most and boosts pasture production.

Hill Farms

The legume birdfoot trefoil, appears to be the best answer to the hill farmers' problems, according to a Cornell agronomist. It will help get poor soil in production, increase pasture yields and reduce the need for buying high amounts of protein feed.

Champion Wheat Crop, Thick Legume Stand Come From Good Soil Care Plus Plant Food

GOOD soil management practices including the use of commercial fertilizer, paid off for Charles Doades, who farms near Washington in Davies county, Ind., when he was named 1950 champion of the 10-Acre Wheat Improvement Contest in Southwestern Indiana.

Doades harvested a 45 bushel per acre yield of Vigo wheat from the 10 acres he entered in the contest. At combining time, the field's legume stand was about 12 inches high. Doades plans to plow it for corn next spring.

This year's championship field was seeded last October, at the rate of two bushels per acre. At seeding time, Doades added 650 pounds per acre of 3-12-12 fertilizer. Late in February he topdressed the field with 30 pounds of nitrogen per acre. The wheat followed soybeans in 1949 and corn in 1948.

Doades is a firm believer in legumes as a soil builder, according to Prof. Howard Lathrope, Purdue University agronomist. He seeded a mixture of seven pounds of sweet clover and five pounds of red clover on the field early in March.

More than 400 Southwestern Indiana wheat growers competed in the wheat improvement contest this year. Fields were scored on appearance, soil management, culture and yields. County agents and specialists from Purdue University cooperated in the contest.

Hazards Precede Holidays

Christmas is weeks away but holiday traffic hazzards are already here says the Minnesota Safety Council. Everyone is in a hurry, rushing to finish Christmas shopping, thinking of a great many things besides safety Pedestrians often have vision obscured by parcels. Drivers all too often are looking at store windows or street decorations.

The Council urges pedestrians to be extra careful in crossing streets, to look both ways, and to remember that drivers may not see them until too late to stop. Drivers are urged to keep alert for pedestrians, to keep their eyes on the road and their minds on their driving, and to reduce speed according to road, weather and traffic conditions.

Mr. Dan Goldsmith, 3024 Curron Road, Louisville, Ky., owner of Coogle Cut Rate Store at 935 West Broadway, says there just aren't enough words in the English language to praise HADACOL correctly. He says he knows most folks don't realize what a change HADACOL can make in their life if their systems are deficient in Vitamins B1, B2, Iron and Niacin.

"Before I started taking HADACOL I was run down and nervous—and had a hard time sleeping nights. With my work in the store I have to spend sometimes 14 hours a day on my feet. Since I am in the retail business I saw how many folks were asking for HADACOL so I decided to try it myself. After the first couple of bottles I could tell a definite improvement. Now I have all the pep and energy in the world, my nerves are steady as ever and I really do get a good night's rest. HADACOL is wonderful—I not only take it, but recommend it to all my customers. I praise the day Senator Dudley J. LeBlanc put HADACOL on the market."

HADACOL Is So Different

Thousands are benefiting from HADACOL . . . whose systems lack Vitamins B1, B2, Iron and Niacin. HADACOL is so wonderful because HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these great Vitamins and Minerals to every body organ—to every part of the body.

Give remarkable HADACOL a chance and if you don't feel better with the first few bottles you take—you get your money back. Only $1.25 for Trial Size; Large Family or Hospital Size, $3.50.

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 hospital economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied.—Adv.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

There is rejoicing at the McLaughlin ranch when Nell receives a wire from Ken reporting that he has found Crown Jewel with foal and is bringing both of them to the ranch. Thunderhead, he says, is following at some distance, and Rob is warned to keep all the mares up. Beaver Greenway is notified in order that he may recover his filly. Rob again speaks of what must be done with Thunderhead. Ken returns Jewel and the foal to the ranch. Carey and Greenway arrive and Ken and Carey meet under the "monkey tree." Without hardly knowing how it happened, they exchange their first kiss, but Carey isn't sure about being "engaged."

CHAPTER XXIV

"I'm not going to let you go!"

"Don't said Carey, "I like it, Ken—"

"What?"

Ken looked disgusted. "Please don't start on those children!"

"Why not?" Carey suddenly threw her arms around his neck. "Oh, Ken! I feel as if you were my husband! You really are such a husband sort of boy!"

Ken tried to evade her arms, looking even more disgusted. "I don't want to be your husband."

"Why, you do! You know you do!"

"No—I want to be your lover. I want you to love me and forget all about those damned children."

"The oldest could have violet eyes like your mother."

Ken dropped his foot into the stream, lowering Carey so abruptly that she clutched him, screaming. Then he carried her to the bank and deposited her.

That was their last talk.

After lunch the Cadillac drew up before the ranch house and Collins jumped out. Greenway came from the cowbarn, leading Jewel. The foal ambled beside her.

Jewel looked nothing like the mare Ken had found in the mountains. Her mane and forelock and tail were plucked and shortened and thinned. She wore a braided blanket coat, her eyes looked out from rimmed holes in a close-fitting cloth hood.

Collins took her from his master clucking to her like and old hen. He led her carefully into the trailer which was hitched to the car.

It was an unusually constructed trailer. In it, against the right side, a small box stall had been built. This was so that on the long journey, the foal would have this little stall to himself, could not be knocked down or trod upon by an excited mother, could either stand and ruminate, or repose upon the thick bed of straw which covered the floor. When he got hungry the car must stop and the foal would be put in with his mother to nurse.

Now the small creature would not follow his mother into the trailer. She turned her head and nickered to it anxiously, but it paid no attention. It looked at the Green, at the people who stood around, at the fountain in the center, at the house, the barn, and it was if it said, "This is all very interesting—let me have a little fun!" It began the ridiculous performance which is a foal's best attempt at bucking. The small curly switch stuck straight up, his nose went down, then his little body twisted and his hind legs shot into the air.

There was a roar of laughter which seemed to startle him. He righted himself, looked inquiringly around and whinnied.

Then he was almost destroyed by a tumbleweed that came bounding across the Green at him. He propped on four stiff legs and gave a loud squeal of fear. Jewel answered, nervously. The weed rolled past him and then stopped, hooked on a bramble. The foal stepped forward and stretched out his nose to sniff at it. The wind stiffened, the weed strained against its frail anchor, broke loose and sailed away with the foal galloping after.

Thunderhead Succumbs To Ken's Pleadings

There was another burst of laughter. Collins beamed as if he had given birth to the foal himself. But he wanted it safe in the little stall in the trailer which he and Gus had labored half the night to build.

For a moment Carey was puzzled, and then, "Tumbleweed! Of course! How perfect, Mrs. McLaughlin!"

"Come, Tumbleweed!" called Carey, and she and Ken went to separate the foal from the weed.

Ken was sitting on the terrace, the next afternoon. He was alone on the ranch, his mother and father had gone to town. He was all packed up. In an hour or two, or whenever they came back, they would drive him in to town to have dinner there and then catch the eastbound express.

Miss Sartoris, in her white uniform, came down the Gorge with Penny. Penny, now two years old, was dragging a tiny cart on wheels. In the cart was a doll about six inches long.

As they reached the terrace Ken called to her. "Come here, Penny—come here to see me."

Penny did not need to be urged. She loved her brothers.

Miss Sartoris joined in the conversation and recounted the small adventures of their walk.

Ken sat half-listening, his eyes wandering.

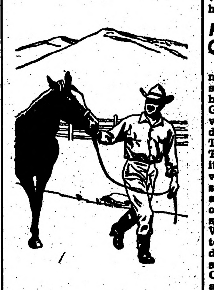
The sound of horses neighing came from the stables, then the sound of heavy hoofs coming down the Gorge.

Ken was sitting so that with the slightest turn of his head, the Gorge was in view. Now he saw the horse coming down it. The white horse. Thunderhead!

Ken did not move. Miss Sartoris went on chatting, Penny trotting from one to the other.

Thunderhead walked slowly to the fountain. Ken got up and went into the house, through the kitchen to the back porch where a halter and bucket of oats were always kept. He took the halter over his arm, the bucket of oats in his hand, and went out the back door, across the terrace and Green, down to the fountain.

As he approached Thunderhead and began to talk to him, he heard Miss Sartoris say, "Why, is that the horse everyone's been talking about?"



Greenway came from the barn leading Jewel.

"I guess it is," said Ken easily. "Come on, Thunderhead, you've had enough to drink. How about some oats?"

Thunderhead swung his dripping mouth up, his head high. He turned it to look at Ken, grunting. Ken sat the oat pail on the stone rim of the fountain. Thunderhead put his nose down to it. Ken slipped the end of the rope up underneath the great neck with his right hand, took hold of it on the crest of the neck with his left, drew it over, tied it with the loop against a knot which had been put in the rope to keep the noose from slipping. Then, holding this with a catch around his arm, he put the halter underneath Thunderhead's chin, his arms on each side of his head. "Come on, boy! Stick your nose in this!"

Ken's heart did not even miss a beat. He wondered at this. He led the horse around the Green, showed him off to Miss Sartoris. He said, "Want to see me ride him?"

The horse was obedient to him. Ken's knees held him tightly. Neck-reining with the halter rope, Ken rode him slowly around the fountain, cantered in a wider circle over the Green.

"Yes, he is pretty, isn't he?" said Ken bringing Thunderhead to a stop in front of the terrace. "Look, Miss Sartoris, what time is it? Have you got a watch?"

"I want to go for a ride on him," said Ken. He slid off the horse. "First let's give Penny a ride. Want to ride the geegee, baby?"

"Huh?" said Penny cocking her head and looking at the horse. Without letting go the rope Ken picked her up and held her under Thunderhead's nose. "Smell her, Thunderhead. That's my sister. That's my mother's baby. Get a whiff of her."

Ken Gives Penny Ride on Thunderhead

Pearl came out of the house to see what was doing. Ken lifted Penny up on to the stallion's broad back and the big black muzzle and face came around to watch her.

"Come along, Miss Sartoris, you hold her while I lead him."

Miss Sartoris clutched the baby by one foot and her sash and the little procession wound around the fountain. Penny laughed, pounding her little fists on the horse's withers.

He lifted the baby off. "I'm going for a ride. Listen. If my mother and father come before I'm back, don't tell them Thunderhead came back, I want to tell them myself."

Ken had his ride.

It was only at the station, when he was saying goodby to his mother and father that he told them that Thunderhead had come home and that he had put him in the box stall in the cow barn, where Jewel had been.

He added. "So he's there now. You can do whatever you want with him. Are you going to shoot him, Dad?"

Rob answered this casually, "No, of course not, Ken. Now that he's been caught, there's no point in shooting him. I'll have Dr. Hicks up to geld him. He'll be a better horse than ever, all the trouble over, and you'll have him to ride for half of your life. A magnificent animal! I can't tell you how happy I am this happened."

Next day Rob went for a ride on him.

Ride on Thunderhead Quickens Rob's Blood

With the thought in his mind of not putting too much strain on the stallion's self-control, Rob turned his back on the ranch house, the Gorge, the pasture where the mares were enclosed and took his way down the meadows, along Lone Tree Creek. Time and again he put Thunderhead at the stream to jump it—wider and wider jumps—jumps with a high wall of willows this side of the water—the other side, and every time the stallion sailed over hardly pausing to gather himself or to take off. What power! What reserve! Rob's blood began to run faster. He crossed the meadow to the place where the ground sloped up and away from the creek. One of the steep rock-slides separated it from the higher grazing land above. He put the stallion at the rock slide and let him have his head. He felt the muscles gather under him. There was slight roughnesses in the surface of the rock, here and there a vein of grass, an angle—nothing presented any difficulty to Thunderhead. The big hoofs seized every foothold unerringly. Where there was no foothold he seemed to advance by an irresistible inner force, there was a great leap at the end, and they were on the grass. Rob touched his heel to the curving arc of ribs and Thunderhead moved into a swift canter. Rob would try his speed now and prepared, with hands, heels, the tilt of his body, to give the signal, but Thunderhead read his mind and anticipated him. The canter became a gallop, a run, then that incredibly swift floating pace which seemed more in the air than on the ground. The hoofs reached, slashed at the ground, man and horse sailed forward, the hoofs reached, slashed again—

The quickening of his blood became an excitement such as Rob had rarely felt. What horseman is there who has not at times dreamed of a ride more like the ride of the Valkyries than anything which takes place on this earth? And of a horse endowed as, occasionally, a man is endowed with almost supernatural abilities? Here it was—the supernatural ride, and the unearthly stallion between his knees, happy as he was happy, rejoicing as he was rejoicing, perfectly balanced by him, perfectly obedient.

Thoughts zigzagged through Rob's mind uncontrolled. They struck into his heart. Recollections of his long war against this animal . . . give away . . . geld . . . shoot . . . kill.

At last Rob gathered the reins and turned toward the ranch. This would be the final test. On the way home they would pass the Six Foot Pasture where the mares were confined.

Thunderhead did not pass them unaffected. His body gathered and trembled. Rob held him with hands, knees, and voice. There were wild neighs and answering whinnies from the mares. They collected at the fence, crying to him to come closer. But he had been well trained. Under the saddle, he gave obedience.

Rob unsaddled him and rubbed him down, fed him, led him to water. There was no sweat on him. The ride had not winded him.

That night he told Nell he was considering replacing Banner with Thunderhead as the Goose Bar stud.

"Yes, Thunderhead!"

"But you were going to have him gelded!"

"Rob!"

"Well, a man can change his mind, can't he?"

Apples that Heal

Children afflicted with stomach disorders such as diarrhea have been cured with raw apple or apple powder. Apples—mellow apples—are peeled, cored, and grated into apple pulp. It takes three to 12 apples of medium size daily. Apple pulp, plus weak tea, is given for two days, as much as the child will take. Tests were made at the West Virginia agricultural experiment station.

Lesson From Earth

There is no reason for any part of the home to remain dull and uninteresting. No place on earth is too remote or too barren for nature to give it color. The siennas and umbers with which paints are tinted come from the earth itself. Some of the loveliest, softest shades for walls and woodwork are borrowed from sagebrush, the desert sand, and the gray of lava. Even ore contains rich purples and reds.

Re-Dyeing Prints

Is it possible to re-dye printed fabrics? Yes, and the result often creates a highly desirable color effect. The print design, however, cannot be removed and will show through even when dyed black. Darker dye-colors are recommended by the bureau, therefore, so as to subordinate the original print pattern as much as possible.

Deer Hunting

Accidents often happen because a hunter has just shot at a deer or other game and seeing the bushes move he pulls the trigger before positively identifying his target. Always be certain that it is game you're shooting at—even when you're in the heat of the chase. One man's life is far more valuable than all the game that might get away.

Measure Earth's Distortion

For the first time the distortion of the earth due to the gravitational pull of the sun and the moon during a total eclipse of the sun was measured recently by two scientists from the Institute of Geophysics on the Los Angeles campus of the University of California.

Backward Nations

A Twentieth Century Fund survey points out that China and India, with 40 per cent of the world's population, account for only 2 per cent of its manufacturing and 8.4 per cent of its imports of manufactured goods.

"Mending" Plants

House plants, such as geraniums, begonias or ivy, which bend over or partially break off, may be mended by wrapping around with cellophane tape. This will help only if the stem is not completely broken off.

Fastening Corsages

If you wear a shoulderless formal at a holiday party, you can secure your Christmas corsage to your bare shoulder with cellophane tape. It can be fastened to the wrist the same way.

Welt Shoes

Welt shoes, which account for about one-third of all shoe production, derive their strength and sturdy appearance from the fact that cattle hide leather is used for insole, welt and outsole.

Coffee Cake

The dry ingredients for muffins, coffee cake, etc., may be mixed ahead of time and placed in any convenient covered container. Label and store. Then mix with liquid ingredients and bake as desired.

Canned Chicken

Bread Toast

Bread toasted under the broiler has a certain crisp taste that's delicious. Preheat broiler about 3 minutes, put bread on broiler pan about three inches from flame.

Peanut Butter

Roasted peanuts or peanut butter are important food sources of the B-vitamins, as well as proteins and fats.

1951 Pig Crop

Indications are that the 1951 pig crop will be larger than in 1950, according to U.S. department of agriculture estimates.

Frosted Grain

The feeding value of frosted grain is about in proportion to the test weight of the grain.

Pleased Him

"The next person who interrupts the proceedings will be sent home," declared the judge.

"Hurrah!" yelled the prisoner.

PROFESSION MISTAKEN

As the after-dinner speaker sat down to his meal, he coughed. His upper plate fell to the floor and broke.

The guest at his side realized the man's plight, dug into his pocket and came up with a set. The speaker-to-be tried them, they were too big. The man supplied another set. They were too small. The third set was a perfect fit.

The speaker got along perfectly with the borrowed teeth, and returned them with thanks.

"By the way," he inquired, "are you a dentist?"

At Your own Risk

Charlotte—"What kind of a car has Tom?"

Dorothy—"A pray-as-you-enter!"

Hey There!

Hay is something we must make between the time we get out of it and the time we hit it.

Asia is the danger spot of the world today, most observers believe. The above map shows point of Communist aggression and countries being aided by the United States. China Reds now dominate Tibet, and observers theorized Nepal may be next.

UNITED NATIONS:

Formula for Peace

Russia's Andrie Y. Vishinsky in a slashing, abusing speech in the United Nations general assembly outlined a series of conditions which he said must be accepted before there could be world peace. He made it plain that there was no other possible ground for the settlement of east-west differences.

The main condition of Vishinsky's speech was the demand that the Chinese Communists be allowed a seat in the United Nations. Russia has long battled for admission of China in the U.N., but the tone of Vishinsky's speech was much stronger than it had been on other occasions.

The main points of Vishinsky's demands:

1. A pledge not to try to get around the veto.
2. Unconditional prohibition of the atomic-bomb.
3. Armed forces under exclusive control of the security council.
4. Aid to backward countries under international control.
5. Development of international trade without discrimination.

These were the demands reportedly given to Secreteary-General Trygve Lie when he visited Prime Minister Stalin during his trip to Moscow in May. Lie's refusal to accept them is believed the reason the Russians opposed his re-election as secretary-general.

Many observers saw a threat in a part of Vishinsky's speech. He said if these demands were ignored it would be idle to think of peace being achieved through the U. N.

KOREA:

In Ice and Snow

In ice and snow, with the mercury often below zero, United Nations forces in Korea continued a slow advance against Communists troops.

Snow and ice made operations slow and dangerous. Supply routes far to the rear were blocked making it necessary to depend on air drops.

Military leaders reported approximately 100,000 Chinese and Korean Communists were established in a 60-mile line below the great hydro-electrice plants on the Yalu river border between Korea and Manchuria. An all-out battle in the area was expected.

The advance has been carried out behind devastating air attacks by the U.S. air force.

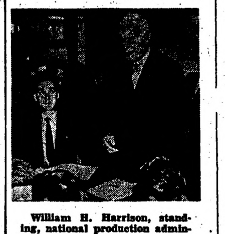
American officers said the advance was progressing "well," but just how fast they go depends a great deal upon the weather. In many of the mountain passes wind had piled snow 10 to 12 feet deep

Meanwhile, the Russians are making new threats concerning the Korean Conflict. Among other things, they charge that Japanese soldiers are now being used in Korea.

According to the Soviet, a Chinese-Russian treaty calls for their intervention whenever Japanese troops are used against the Chinese.

Some sources believed this could be another step in the Russian plan for justification of her throwing men and planes into the conflict. Others believe, however, that Russia would not take such a step.

NPA Chief



William H. Harrison, standing, national production administrator, ordered a 35 per cent reduction in civilian aluminum supplies and warned that the action will result in some unemployment and higher prices for aluminum products next year. The order is effective January 1, 1951.

DEFENSE:

Nerve Center Moved

The air force announced that headquarters for the nation's defense against air attack will be moved from New York to Colorado Springs, Colo. The move takes the nerve center of air defense of the U. S. 1,650 miles from the Atlantic ocean, deep into the interior for safety reasons.

The move emphasized the fact that the oceans surrounding the country are no longer a barrier against attack. The swing to the west also lent emphasis to the strategic concept that if present tension with Russia should erupt into World War III, the gravest danger of aerial blows against the United States would focus on the northwest "gateway."

Observers pointed out that guided missiles, conceivably with atomic warheads, could be fired from submarines lying a few miles off the present headquarters at Mitchell Field, N. Y., thus destroying the defense center with one blow.

The center now controls both the east and west air-defense forces. Some 800 military and civilian personnel will be assigned to the new center. Lt. Gen. Ennis C. Whitehead will be in command.

EUROPE:

Prewar Production

Western Europe, with American aid, increased exports and industrial output above prewar levels, the economic co-operation administration announced.

The report was an encouraging trend in the west's battle against communism. The gains must be increased, however, to support the load of arming for defense against communism.

The E.C.A said: "The urgency to rearm has emphasizeed the importance. . . for western Europe of continuing its progress toward the economic goals of the recovery program. The required expansion in military production cannot be achieved unless Europe's economic base is further strengthened."

WHOLESALE PRICES

Wholesale Index at All-Time High

The bureau of labor statistics reported wholesale prices hit an all-time high during the second week of November. The new index was an advance of .6 of a per cent in one week and was 8.7 per cent above the June 20 level, before the Korean fighting.

All commodities other than farm products and foods again advanced to another peak, 9.3 per cent above pre-Korean war levels. Hogs and steers continued to move in opposite directions. Hogs dropped while steers advanced to the highest point in 1950.

Steel-scrap prices which had not changed for two months advanced 50 cents a ton. Rubber prices, reacting to the war news, also advanced. Tin prices also fluctuated violently.

JUST JESTING

Proper Punishment

Wifey—"John, what punishment should be meted out to a man who proposes to a woman and then refuses to marry her?"

Hubby—"He should be compelled to marry her."

Still Sick

A lusty-lunged auctioneer was addressing a crowd in a small town. Taking up a box of cigars, he shouted, "You can't get better, gentlemen. I don't care where you go."

"No," replied a cynical voice from the crowd, "you can't. I smoked one last week, and I'm not better yet."

Definitions

"What is a debtor, pa?"

"A man who owes money."

"And what is a creditor?"

"The man who thinks he's going to get it."

Fast Guy

Two farmers, sitting by the stove in the village store, were engaging in a little exaggeration fest.

"Naow, I oncet had a nephew," said one, "who was as fast a critter as ever I see. Why he use tew hev people shoot at him, and then outrun the bullet for five miles and get clean away."

"Wal, yew won't think that's so fast when yew hear about my cousin. Why that man could blow out the light and then be undressed by the time the room got dark."

YOUR COUNTRY and YOURSELF
Buy U. S. SAVINGS BONDS

It is time for every American to ask himself what he can do to help keep his country strong and free. There is much to be done for here's what we must do to support our defense forces and to end aggression in the world: Produce the materials and equipment needed for defense; raise the money to pay the cost of increased defense efforts; do all we can to prevent inflation. Buying U. S. Savings Bonds helps do all of these. Enrolling for the Payroll Savings Plan where you work means you are providing for your own financial security and at the same time helping your country. THAT IS SOMETHING EVERYONE CAN DO.

I Have A "Close Squeak"!

Spent last Saturday morning wandering all over the house. Wherever I went—upstairs or down—I kept hearing a "squeak." Couldn't find out where it was coming from until noon-time when the missus came home from her weekly shopping.

"Listen," I says to her, "hear that squeak?" I started walking real quiet-like across the kitchen and there it went again! "Joe Marsh," she laughs, "that is nothing but your suspender clips rubbing back and forth when you walk!" And darned if it wasn't!

From where I sit, I'd been letting a little thing become a serious problem. Like some little difference of opinion or taste will start off a great big argument. I may prefer a temperate glass of beer with my dinner—while the missus likes tea—but we figure that no two people have exactly the same likes and dislikes. So, why get all "het up" about it?

The moral is, check your suspenders—and check your temper when it comes to little things.

Are taxes endangering this Minnesota industry?

Babineau

FROM THE KELLIHER INDEPENDENT—Walter Babineau, editor—comes a timely warning important to all Minnesota. "There are many states that have more factories than we do," writes Mr. Babineau, "but our own great state also has many assets. Take our iron ore industry. It has done a lot to make Minnesota an iron ore center. Not only that—it has paid out millions in wages to Minnesota men, and millions more in annual taxes to the benefit of all. Now this great industry is endangered because some people want to tax it to death."

CAN IT BE TRUE that taxes threaten the very life of Minnesota's iron ore industry? You be the judge . . .

It's a fact that the ore industry now pays taxes at a far higher rate than other industries of this state. Indeed, the rate is twice as high: a 12% occupation and royalty tax vs. the 6.3% state income tax paid by other industries. And actually the burden is much more than double because the ore industry is not allowed to deduct as much for costs as other industries.

In other words, this one industry has been singled out to carry a far heavier tax load than other Minnesota industries. Minnesota people can, if they wish, disregard the unfairness of this. But they cannot escape the possible RESULTS of such taxation.

Today, you see, Minnesota ores face mighty stiff competition from the ores of other areas. What area will benefit most from its ore resources? What area will provide the most jobs for miners, the most support for other business? That depends on ore production costs.

Of course taxes, like manpower and horsepower, are a part of ore costs. Indeed, today they're a more important part than ever. For to develop our leaner ores—the kind that MUST be developed to keep ore payrolls up—the producers will need to erect great new "ore manufacturing plants." The multi-million-dollar investments these will require must come from the same pocketbook that pays ore taxes.

Naturally, Minnesota wants its ore industry to continue yielding substantial tax revenue. But over the years, it will actually harvest more tax dollars if it gives this industry, through fair treatment, every chance to survive and expand.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

In loving memory of Bertha
Tho' in stature she was small
In love and kindness she was great
She never complained or was dissatisfied
But smilingly accepted her fate
Ever willing to lend a hand
Or do something for someone she loved
Why God took her away is not hard to understand
There is no heartache or sorrow above
She will always have a warm spot in our hearts
Time will never dim loving memory of her
May God ease the pain you feel at her loss
Give you courage and strength it to bear

DEATH CLAIMS BERTHA MOBERG ON THURSDAY

Funeral services Held From Holt Monday Afternoon With Rev. Hanson Officiating

Funeral services were held on Monday from the Nazareth Lutheran church in Holt for Miss Bertha Moberg, 43, who passed away at the home of her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Harris Burton, at Humbolt on Thursday afternoon. The church had been beautifully decorated for the final rites and many friends, relatives and neighbors were in attendance.

Rev. C. O. Hanson of Middle River officiated. Pallbearers were: Ingvald Fosholm, Lawrence Ring, Johnny Nelson, Leslie Dahl, Edward Johnson and John Johnson. Interment was in the Holt cemetery and arrangements were by the Collins Funeral Home of Middle River.

Bertha Leona Moberg was born in Grayson, Saskatchewan, Canada, on October 23, 1907 and at the age of two years moved to Gatzke with her parents where they lived until 1912 when they moved to Middle River where they lived until 1917, From Middle River they moved to Mud Lake where they lived until 1936 when they moved to Holt. In June 1950 she went to Humboldt to stay with her brother-in-law and sister.

At the time of her death, Miss Moberg was 43 years, 1 month and 14 days of age.

She is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hilmer Moberg of Holt; five sisters: Florence (Mrs. Arnold Sannes) of Holt, Lydia (Mrs. Lloyd Babcock) of Humboldt, Delores, (Mrs. Harris Reese) of Humboldt, Olive (Mrs. Oscar Lunke) of Holt and Joyce (Mrs. Clarence Ness of Holt; four brothers: George, Gerald, Walter and Clifford Moberg, all of Holt. She is also survived by a host of other friends and relatives.

Card of Thanks

We sincerely wish to thank all who were so kind to us during our recent bereavement. Especially do we thank Rev. Hanson for his comforting words, the singers, pallbearers, those who gave flowers and in memoiams, C. Collins, and Ladies Aid for the nice lunch. May God Bless You All.

Mr. and Mrs. Hilmer Moberg and family.

Basket Ball Benefit Party

The Holt Basket Ball boys have kept up their good record by scoring two victories last week. On Wednesday evenimg they played Grygla and won by a score of 36 to 37 in the hard fought game.

Thursday evening they journeyed to Goodridge to win in another close game with a score of 31 to 34.

These boys are sponsoring a party at the Sportsmen's Club for the benefit of the team. It will be in the form of a box and pie social and will be held Friday evening Dec. 15. Besides buying a pie and thereby getting a pretty girl to eat with, you can also play bingo. A turkey will be given as a door prize. Come and show the boys you are boosting for them.

1950 Graduate Makes University 'Frosh' BB Team

George Fricker Jr. Named to Univeristy Team by Frosh Coach

Editor's Note: The following news article was re-printed from the Minnesota "U" daily and concerns George Fricker Jr. of Holt, who graduated last spring from the Newfolden High School. George is a son of Mr. and Mrs. George Fricker of Holt, and while attending school here was an outstanding basketball player.

Coach Joe Vancisin cut the freshmen basketball squad to 28 and began intensive work on fundamentals at Cooke hall.

Drive-in drills and individual offense and defense occupied the cagers during most of the practice.

Vanicisin also commented briefly on Minnesota basketball as taught by Ozzie Cowels. He said the only boys willing to concentrate on defense would fit into the Gophers' style of play.

The complete roster:

Extra Caution Needed in December Driving

Fifty-one persons were killed in motor vehicle traffic accidents on Minneosta streets and highways in December, 1949, a monthly total exceeded in only 3 months, July August and October. Reported injured were 1,711 persons.

Early darkness, icy and snow-covered driving surfaces, and the general hurry and distractions of the holiday and pre-holiday season are deemed the main cause of the high December accidents.

Kentucky Rifle

The famed muzzle-loading Kentucky rifle, an unmatched weapon in early frontier days, is enjoying a well deserved comeback in popular esteem. Gun clubs and sports enthusiasts report renewed interest in the old rifle, which is again being used at target meets and in actual hunting. Marksmen interested in the sharpshooting traditions of their forebears are rediscovering the Kentucky's celebrated accuracy.

Sweet Peppers

Sweet peppers may be either green or red. They change from a deep green to a red color as they become more mature. The hot peppers, either green or red, are used mostly in pickles and relishes. There is one thing about eating peppers, they are rich in vitamin C, the vitamin you need every day, and they also have liberal amounts of vitamin A.

Interesting Item

Old Mother Goose of English and American nursery fame, has some real competition in Colombia, South America. She is "La Pobre Viejecita," or "The Poor Old Lady," who has "no place to live at all, except for a house with a garden, An orchard and fine stone wall!" The delightful, Spanish nonsense rhyme by Rafael Pombo is a favorite of Colombian children.

Easy to Stick

The newest way to affix notices to bulletin boards is through the use of magnets. About one-fourth the size of a cube of sugar, these new "tacks" are now sold with steel bulletin boards. Each magnet, which is made of a 25 per cent nickel alloy, is capable of holding 33 times its own weight.

Consumption of Fertilizer

Consumption of nitrogen fertilizer in the United States is now more than twice the prewar level and is expected to continue rising over the next few years. There is a brick demand for nitrogen in the United States and if commercial production should increase it would probably be taken by the farmers of this country. Only small quantities of commercial products would be left for export unless a set-aside program were instituted.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Crown Jewel is turned over to Greenway and the groom, Collins. The colt's antics delight everyone as he frolics about and chases a tumbleweed. This inspires Rob to suggest that they name the colt "Tumbleweed" and Carey enthusiastically agrees. Ken sees Thunderhead coming down the gorge and determines to capture him. It's done at last! Ken manages to get a rope around Thunderhead's neck as the stallion munches oats. He shows how easily he can ride Thunderhead. Rob takes a ride on the great horse and is thrilled with Thunderhead's fire and strength. He determines to ride the horse in the Delaware Hunt Cup Race.

CHAPTER XXV

Rob, lost in thought, was sitting by the fire, staring into it, leaning forward, his arms set across his thighs. Now he sprang up, went to the mantel and nervously began to fill his pipe. As he did so he stepped on Chap's tail and there was a wild yelp. Impatiently he shoved the dog away. Chaps went off and sat down near the piano, eyeing him reproachfully.

"What about Banner?" asked Nell.

"Banner will have the rest he deserves. The best the ranch has to offer. A pasture of his own, shelter in the winter, a box stall, oats and hay as long as he has teeth to eat them. He's given me a lifetime of service."

"And WhoDat," said Nell, "You had picked him to replace Banner."

Rob made an impatient gesture. "What of it? Anyone with half an eye can see that WhoDat is not cut out for a range stallion." He tamped the tobacco violently into the bowl of his pipe and went on in the same half-angry voice. "The purpose of all breeding is to produce the perfect — the superperfect individual. When you've done it—when you've got him, what sense is there in finding fault with the process that made him?" He struck a match, held it over the bowl of his pipe, puffed until smoke poured out of his mouth, then threw the match into the fire. "Besides," he added, "if Thunderhead had once won a great race, he would have a name, and his colts would sell because of that."

"Won a great race!" exclaimed Nell. "What are you talking about?"

"The Delaware Hunt Cup."

"But Ken is going to ride Jewel!"

Rob did not turn his head but the narrowed line of his blue eyes swung around to rest upon her face, his white teeth showed beside the stem of his pipe.

Nell sprang to her feet. "Rob! You wouldn't!"

"Wouldn't I!" he grinned. "I can't wait for the chance!"

Rob took his pipe out of his mouth and said more quietly, "Nell, I'm aching to do it. And Thunderhead is aching to do it. And we'll win. Ken has never completely mastered that stallion. No boy could. He's a man's horse. He's my horse. And I tell you he knows it."

Nell looked down at the fire, then lifted her hands and examined a hangnail on one finger. She sat down abruptly and slowly raised her eyes to Rob's.

He was looking at her with a strange, questioning, almost humble expression. "Yes," he said, "I'm thinking of that, too. How would it affect Ken? After all, Thunderhead belongs to him—"

Nell looked back at the fire, placing herself first in Rob's shoes, then in Ken's.

Finally she said, "Ken's awfully happy that he's going to ride Jewel. That's tied up with Carey."

"And there's to be a big auction over at Pine Bluffs," said Nell. "There'll be mobs there. I'll go along!" she added excitedly.

"What about when I take him East?" asked Rob. "I suppose you won't want to leave Penny?"

Blue fire flashed at him from her eyes. "Not go!" she exclaimed. "Do you think I would miss that race with either you or Ken riding Thunderhead? We'll keep Miss Sartoris for Penny."

Rob's eyebrows shot up and he grinned. "Atta girl!"

Nell Frets as Rob Says He'll Ride Race

Nell's hands dropped in her lap. "Thanksgiving," she murmured. "It might be very cold. A good thing I've got my grey squirrel coat."

Excitement swept Rob again. He leaped to his feet. "I've got a chance!" he cried and gave a skip, like a boy.

The day of the race was raw and cold. Fitful sunshine played over the course and the rolling Delaware country beyond. Although occasionally there was the smell of snow in the air the ground was dry and hard. It was weather to whip heat into the blood and make the horses dance as they stood in the paddock waiting to be saddled.

It was true that Nell felt no anxiety about Ken. This panic had seized her when Ken had made his decision to stick to the original plan and ride Jewel. Why had he done that? To win a victory for Carey's filly? Or because he saw that his Dad longed to ride Thunderhead? Nell suspected it was the latter. At any rate it had not been until that moment that Rob's riding of the stallion had become real to her. Now it was comin', now it was inevitable, and it was only a matter of minutes before she would see them ride out onto the track and take their places.

She had been insane ever to agree to it! Rob — middle-aged, tough and close-knit in bone and muscle—not like these little slim whips of jockeys, not like Ken who could take a dozen falls a day and not know it—those terrible jumps!

Bewildered by the voice, her eyes still strained to see the white horse, the black-shirted rider. There they come!

Rob squeezed her arm hard. She looked into his dark face, then flashed her glance to the jockey who was riding the big white horse through the opening. The shirt had the number 4, and it covered a very slim, boyish body. The horse—those great white haunches! the powerful legs!

"Rob!" she cried, clutching him. "Oh, Rob!"

Rob's strong arms held her steady, he ploughed a way for her, drew her back against the grandstand, then, raising his knee, he braced a toe in an aperture of the boards and lifted her to his knee.

"Can you see?"

Her head was considerably above his own. She strained her eyes after the horses.

"Rob! What happened?"

"Watch!"

"But what happened?"

"I tumbled—that all!"

"Tumbled?"

"Nell! It's about two months I've been in love with Thunderhead. Ken's been in love with him since he was born—get it?"

"He did it for you?—chose Jewel, I mean?"

"That's it. Now for God's sake watch them. I can't see. Where are they?"

"They are marching past the judges stand," said Nell. "Who's that on Crown Jewel — number eleven, isn't she—with the green and gold?"

"Yep. That's Vickers, a crackerjack rider."

Ken, Thunderhead Win Thrilling Horse Race

There was a sudden crescendo in the roar of sound from the grandstand.

"What's that?" Rob asked.

"That bay horse that was led past the judges' stand—when he got near the other horses at the post he lashed out at several. He looks vicious to me."

"What's his number?"

"Ten. Blue and red stripes."

"That's Top Hole—a bad actor but a good 'chaser'."

The roar from the grandstand swelled as the horses swept forward and rapidly sorted themselves out into leaders, followers, tail-enders. Crown Jewel made a good start and held her place in a group of three just behind the leaders. Thunderhead ran alone behind the tail-enders.

Beaver Greenway joined them. Edging their way as the crowd surged and flowed, they gradually worked to the rail. How swiftly the first mile was covered! Four tough jumps and two horses down already, but not Jewel, not Thunderhead. The stallion was running wide on the outside, gaining on the others a little, taking his jumps easily. And now the bright shirts and the straining horses were half hidden as they curved away through the rolling country beyond.

And now Thunderhead began to close up the distance between himself and the leaders. He still ran wide, as if scorning the advantage of being closer to the rail. Down the backstretch he was abreast of Top Hole. The two horses took jump after jump with absolute precision. As Thunderhead forged ahead, running now with his strange floating gait, Top Hole seemed to lose heart. He dropped back. The crowd went wild. One length, two, three separated the white stallion from the six horses who were still in the running. They swept into the home stretch, the jockeys plying their whips, the crowd in a frenzy, all eyes fastened on the one jump remaining, the rail, the ditch, the wall and the water. Jewel galloped with might and main as if indignant that Thunderhead should run away from her.

For one second Carey closed her eyes. But only for a second. In the breathless, almost silent moment in which Thunderhead rode up to the last jump, Carey leaned forward and yelled, "Oh you, Ken! Come on!"

It was over.

The grasp on her wrist tightened and she met her grandmother's blazing eyes. "What behavior! You ought to be ashamed!"

"Ken's won," stammered Carey. "He's won, Grandma! Let me go!" She gave a tug at her wrist. Around them the crowd was surging into the aisles of the grandstand. Announcements were bawled through the loudspeakers.

"You stay here with me!" said Mrs. Palmer severely.

For one moment Carey stood hardly aware of her grandmother, thrilling with the realization of the strange haphazard victory which, after so many heartbreaking years of struggle and failure, had come to Ken.

Then Carey turned on the old lady. "Grandma, the are some things I want to tell you!"

"Tell me!" Mrs. Palmer became inches taller. Her eyes boared into the girl's face.

"Yes—tell you." Carey marveled that she was completely without fear. "I am engaged to Ken McLaughlin. I am not going back with you to the Blue Moon. I'm going to Miss Meredith's school in Washington to get the rest of my college credits and next year I'm going to Vassar. And I'll be visiting the McLaughlins most of next summer at the Goose Bar."

"You dare to tell me, what you'll do and not do!"

Carey, 'Free,' to Tell Ken They're Engaged

For answer Carey smiled. She lifted her imprisioned wrist, gave it a sharp twist, and she was free.

She said the word aloud as she stepped back, rubbing the skin where her grandmother's hand had held her. "Free!" The next moment she was gone.

Mrs. Palmer could hardly believe that such a thing could happen to her. She looked around to see whom she could get to take her part, but the crowd was concerned only with the outcome of the race, the horses, the announcements. She sat with lips drawn in, brows pulled down over eyes which darted this way and that.

Then a man in the next box saw the cane which had rolled out of her reach. He entered her box, picked up her cane, and courteously handed it to her.

She accepted it without a smile or a word of thanks and continued to sit there as if waiting, the knob of the cane in one hand, her other clasping her large suede bag to her breast. At last her lips began to quiver and her eyes to fill.

She glanced furtively around, but there was no one to see.

With an abrupt, angry gesture, she threw the cane to the floor, rose to her feet and drew her mink coat closer around her. Then, with an air of great hauteur, and with steady gait, she left the box.

All the newspapers and racing sheets found material for something more than the usual announcement of the winner of this famous event. The headline, RANGE STALLION WALKS AWAY WITH THE DELAWARE HUNT CUP topped an article of three columns six inches long, which also contained a picture of Ken sitting on Thunderhead and wearing an amazed expression as he put out his hands to receive the trophy. The stallion had refused his share of the glory—the garland of flowers and was photographed in the act of snorting his disgust. Something of Thunderhead's history was given, also that of Crown Jewel, who had amused onlookers by breaking away from her groom and running to Thunderhead to rub her nose affectionately against his shoulder.

The article was not flattering enough to satisfy Carey, but she liked the picture, and that night, as she pinned it to the edge of the mirror of her dressing-table and then stood looking at it, there was a warm, excited smile on her face. "You don't know it yet, Ken, but we're engaged—really engaged."

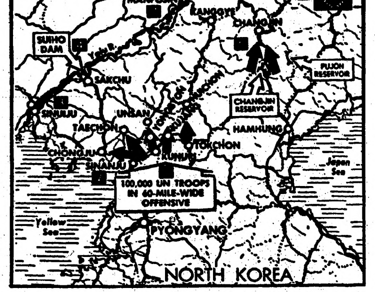
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Chinese Delegation Charges U.S. With Aggression in Korea, China; U.N. Forces Face Defeat in Korea

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



The "big-win-the-war" push got underway (1) in Korea with the 24th division driving on Chongju. Other UN forces aimed toward Taechon. The big offensive was touched off by a frontline visit of Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who flew from Tokyo to Sinanju (2). He also flew over Sinuiju (3) the Suiho dam (4), Hyesanjin (5), and over the Changjin reservoir area (6). Superforts bombed Manpojin (7) in one of the war's big raids.

UNITED NATIONS:

Is It War or Peace?

Fear gripped the United Nations security council when U.S. delegate Warren R. Austin asked Red China's delegate Wu Hsiu-Chuan, "Will there be war or peace in the Far East?"

It was with these words that the United States charged Red China with aggression in Korea; it was these words that created a feeling of fear never before felt in the United Nations. As one diplomat explained, it created such a great fear that those seated in the security council were afraid to speak lest the wrong words plunge the world into World War III.

Communist China had been invited to the council to debate the charge that the U.S. had committed aggression against Formosa. Instead the Chinese delegate charged the security of his country was endangered by U.S. aggression against Korea, and he asserted he was alarmed by the spread toward China of the "flames" of the U.S. "war of aggression." He demanded the withdrawal of United Nations troops from Korea and a seat in the United Nations for his country.

The American delegate charged China with aggression after General MacArthur reported there were 200,000 Chinese Communist soldiers in Korea and that the U.N. forces faced an entirely new war.

Red China replied that the Chinese troops in Korea were volunteers and that Peiping will not stop their departure for the battle front.

Austin asked the Chinese delegate 20 direct questions which, in sum, boiled down to: Why had China thrown 200,000 troops into Korea against United Nations forces and what do you want? The Red delegate did not even answer Austin.

Observers who heard the exchange of charges were agreed that the world was closer to World War III than ever before. It was also evident that China had no intention of calling off its troops in Korea until U.N. forces had been defeated.

But more than this, the future of Asia seemed at stake. China's delegate charged the U.S. with aggression in the Philippines and other Asian countries. This would indicate, most observers felt, that China had mapped a program for the domination of the Far East comparable to that one championed by Japan.

And as the diplomats talked and hurled charges and countercharges, the position of U.N. forces in Korea became more desperate. Their defeat would mean a blow to the United Nations from which that world organization may never recover.

The tone of Wu's security council speech was not new to U.N. delegates. It could have been written by the Russians. At one point Wu threatened the countries backing the United States not to "pull the chestnuts out of the fire for the United States—because if you support United States aggression you must bear the consequences of your actions."

Chinese Reds

Jacob Malik (left), chief of the Soviet delegation to the U. N. and Julius Katz-Suchy (center), Polish delegate, are on hand to welcome the nine-member Chinese Communist delegation which appeared before the United Nations. Malik is shown shaking hands with Gen. Wu Hsiu Chuan, head of the Chinese group.

KOREA:

Chinese Attack

With Gen. Douglas MacArthur personally directing the start, U.N. forces in North Korea launched what was called the "big-win-the-war-push." Initial successes were reported by U.N. commanders, but Chinese Communists counterattacks stalled the drive and broke through the U.N. front at a number of points.

As many as 200,000 Chinese Communists were reported in North Korea, overrunning U.N. positions and threatening the entire army.

The Reds were swiftly exploiting their breakthrough. They were reported swarming along "every road, gulley and ridge line." As many as 21 divisions were reported to be in action.

The situation in Korea was so serious that General MacArthur told the non-Communist powers that they must decide quickly what to do about the grim prospect of "an entirely new war" against Red China. He went so far as to suggest that World War III had actually begun and could be stopped only by a last-minute political solution.

Overnight the military situation in Korea became desperate. MacArthur said Chinese Communists had already thrown "a major segment" of their armies into Korea. They have shown "the obvious intent and preparation" to reinforce this spearhead with perhaps 300,000 more men now on the move in Manchuria, he added.

Observers said that total defeat in Korea was not unlikely if some last minute action is not taken by the United Nations. It was no secret that military commanders wanted the authority to bomb supply centers and concentration points in Manchuria where the Communists have organized for the attack.

AMERICAN COMMUNISTS

Jury Indicts Six Top U. S. Communists

The jury also indicted Philip Jacob Jaffe, former editor of the defunct Amerasia magazine and a key figure in the 1945 "stolen secrets" case.

Also indicted for contempt were Joseph P. Kamp, executive vice-chairman of the constitutional educational league; Edward A. Rumely; executive secretary of the committee for constitutional government, and William L. Patterson, executive secretary of the civil rights congress. All face heavy fines and prison sentences if convicted on contempt charges.

...Less Worry for Me
...with LAND O'LAKES'

That's the experience of HOWARD LIGHT, operator of the Farmers Co-op Creamery Assn. at Pillager, Minn. A double-barreled benefit from marketing through LAND O'LAKES Creameries! "There's absolutely no doubt," he says, "that over a period of time LAND O'LAKES provides more for the farmers who own it. The farmers share in savings of processing, distribution and marketing. Because LAND O'LAKES markets our products for our plants, we operators have fewer worries. We can pay full attention to the quality that gets the top prices. And we can see that every farmer gets the same square deal." Is your plant selling through LAND O'LAKES? It's a good idea!

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Here's An "Expert" Example!

When our Main Street parking problem cropped up again, we announced a strict one-hour parking policy, and swore in extra deputies to enforce it.

We also sent over to the State Capitol for a traffic expert, to give us pointers. He turned out to be real helpful—spent a whole afternoon with us talking about zoning and such. And when he left the building he found a ticket on his car for overtime parking!

Could have gotten sore, I guess—or asked us to "fix" the ticket. But instead, he insisted on going over to the Sheriff's Office and paying his fine.

From where I sit, it's good to know people, like that young fellow, who refuse to be treated any different than anyone else. City people and farmers—those of us who prefer cider and those who'd rather have a cool glass of temperate beer—we're all entitled to the same privileges. That is, so long as what we do doesn't conflict with the law of the land.

Sagstuen-Lindeman Wedding

Nazareth Lutheran church was the scene of a pretty candlelit ceremony on Friday evening, Dec. 15 when Miss Dorothy Sagstuen, daughter of Mr. Ludvig Sagstuen, became the bride of Mr. Marlin Lindemann, son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Lindemann of Grand Forks' N. D. at a single ring ceremony performed by Rev. G. S. Thompson of Thief River Falls. Tall lighted candlebra and vases of chrysanthemum formed the setting for the wedding.

Mrs. Henry Bothman, cousin of the bride, rendered the wedding music, also accompanying Miss Delores Sandberg, soloist, who sang "Because" and "I Love You Truly"

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attired in a white wool dress trimmed in gold sequins and wore a corsage of pink roses and carnations. Her bridesmaid, Miss Dalles Christensen, wore a royal blue dress and a corsage of pink roses and white carnations.

Mr. Thomas Peterson of Grand Forks was best man and the brides brothers, Louis and Raymond Sagstuen were ushers.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held for about 85 relatives and friends in the church parlors which was made festive for the occasion with streamers, silver bells, candles and bouquets of flowers. The bridal table was graced by a tiered wedding cake ornamented with pink roses, a miniature bride and groom and a wedding bell. Waitresses were Miss Joan Oakey and Miss Ruth Larson. Mrs. Lars Ring poured and Mrs. Louis Sagstuen cut the wedding cake. Mrs. O. L. Johnson, the bride's aunt, assisted the host the bride's father, as hostess.

The couple left for a honeymoon trip to Nebraska, Kansas and Colorado. They will make their home in Grand Forks where the groom is engaged in taxicab business.

MERRY
CHRISTMAS

WHAT two words on human tongue are more heart-warming than those! They not only represent a friendly greeting, but in them are summed up the whole spirit of the Yuletide—brightness and laughter, joy of living and joy of giving, health and happiness, peace on earth and good will to all men.

It is a greeting which we will hear often in this community of ours during these happy days of the Christmas season. We will hear it on our streets, in our stores, along our country roads and in our homes. For ours is a friendly community and nowhere is that friendly greeting more sincere. It is not possible, however, for each of us to say "Merry Christmas!" to everyone and thus complete the happy circle of Yuletide good cheer.

But there is one who has that rare privilege, one who has been a welcome visitor at the firesides of the homes in this community throughout the year and who now claims the right to be the first to wish you joy at this joyous time. That one is your Home Paper.

So your Home Paper carries from you to all the community and from all the community to you this friendly greeting:

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

To Become Citizen

It is rather easy for an alien to become a citizen of the United States, provided he can prove legal entry into the country. Qualifications, briefly outlined, are: 20 years of age or over at the time of filing petition for naturalization, five years of continuous residence, belong to the white race or Chinese race or be a descendent of races which belong to the western hemisphere, such as American Indians, Eskimos and Aleutians. He must be able to speak English and write his name in the alphabetical characters of any one language.

Medical School

An A average in premedical college work is not required for admission to medical schools, Dr. Donald G. Anderson of Chicago, secretary of the American Medical association's council on medical education and hospitals, says. According to a recent report to the council, 10 per cent of students admitted to medical schools in the United States during the academic year 1949-1950 had no better than a C-plus scholastic average in premedical college work. Many others, Dr. Anderson pointed out, had B averages.

Queen Zenobia

"Fetters of gold" fit for a queen were the lot of Zenobia, the great ruler of Palmyra, when she was taken captive by the Roman emperor, Aurelian. Instead of ordering her to die, as he might have done, Aurelian ordered that a beautiful villa be prepared for her at Tivoli, where she spent the rest of her days.

Black Becomes White

Titanium oxide, the brilliant white pigment that is used extensively in paints is obtained chiefly from ilmenite, a black mineral containing approximately 47 per cent iron and 53 per cent titanium dioxide. While deposits are found in various parts of the United States, the chief commercial sources of supply are Travancore Beach, India, and Norway.

Napoleon III, who offered a prize in 1870 for the best butter substitute that could be produced in France, was in large part responsible for the first extensive manufacture of the product. Originally made from beef fat, margarine now is derived principally from the fats and oils of plants. The buttery flavor is obtained from milk which is treated with lactic acid bacteria—the same bacteria which gives butter its distinctive taste. Margarine today is custom-built to keep up with nutritional progress and available supplies.

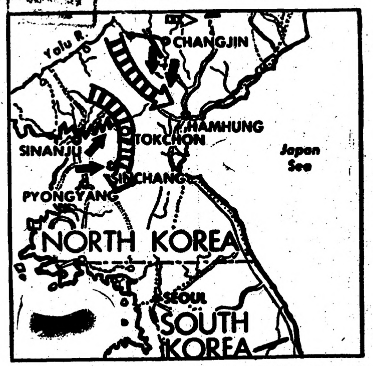
—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Truman, Attlee Talk Over World Situation; U. N. Soldiers Retreat; Wage-Price Controls Are Hinted

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



Communist armies, estimated to total 1,000,000 men, plunged out of Manchuria and smashed the United Nations offensive that was launched to end the war. Pyongyang, capital of North Korea, was lost and U.N. troops retreated southward. Military observers were hesitant to name a probable defense line. One possibility seemed just north of Seoul, capital of South Korea.

TRUMAN-ATTLEE:

For Unity and Peace

Prime Minister Attlee of Britain and President Truman held a series of conferences in Washington during which the leaders of the two most powerful democratic nations discussed the world situation in general and the Korean crisis in particular.

Although no official announcement had been made on topics under discussion, reliable sources said they tried to solve three questions:

1. Should the divided, badly outnumbered, and already reduced forces of the U. N. be withdrawn from Korea as soon as possible, or should they remain and try to fight it out?

2. Should the western powers, if they withdraw or are forced out, then carry on a naval and air blockade of Communist China in an attempt to make the governing of China by the Communists as difficult as possible, or should they reject such a course as an interminable and fruitless operation and choose instead to divert their forces to the defense of Europe and/or southeast Asia?

3. Is a combination of these two courses possible? For example, would it be possible to arrange, through India or the U. N. a cease-fire at the 38th parallel, with a view to seeking an honorable solution, and, if no such solution is offered, then carrying on a limited war against Red China?

Observers were also quick to point out that the meeting of the two was further designed to show the world that Britain and the United States were united in purpose.

Many observers put the problem facing the President and the Prime Minister this way: To get peace on honorable terms if they can, but to continue to punish aggression if they cannot, without becoming involved in a general war with Red China and without getting too many of their forces pinned down in the far east.

The two men were said to agree on one point, that Europe, not Asia, is the decisive theater of operations.

PRICES:

Hit New High

The government's cost-of-living index soared to a record high of 174.8, meaning 174.8 per cent of the 1935-39 price average.

A seasonal decline in meat prices failed to halt the general upward surge in the cost of things that enter into a family's living costs. Apparel and house furnishing led the way, but all major items in the family budget joined the climb.

The increase brought automatic pay boosts to nearly a million automobile workers whose contracts are geared to the rise and fall of the monthly price indicator. Millions of other workers, however, find only a greater strain on the weekly pay check.

Middle income groups in the United States, especially the white collar worker whose wages are not tagged to a cost-of-living contract, are feeling the pinch of increased prices.

Wealthy Red

KOREA:

Heartbreak Road

The military situation in Korea reached the point where no one would predict what would happen next. The situation was considered serious, and before this reaches print, may be desperate.

Military observers throughout the world were asking themselves if another Dunkerque was in prospect? They wanted to know was it possible, or even practicable, to attempt the establishment of a new defense line?

But several bitter facts could not be denied. United Nations forces in Korea were in full retreat. Pyongyang was evacuated and the retreating army jammed the road to Seoul, endless columns moving bumper to bumper. The road up the peninsula had been bloody, the one back was heartbreaking.

And as much as the free nations of the world hated to admit it, the Communist armies of China had demonstrated to the world they could march where they wanted to in the face of stiff resistance. General MacArthur estimated that China had thrown as many as 1,000,000 men into the campaign.

Military observers said it appeared the Chinese were determined to destroy the eighth army. If Lt. Gen. Walton H. Walker, commander, decided to stand and fight at some spot in South Korea, the U. S. army would face the greatest odds in its history.

Most observers admitted frankly that such a stand would be almost impossible against overwhelming odds. And a defeat would mean the loss of the entire eighth army.

The only other possibility was a beachhead like the one at Pusan, with artillery, planes and ships putting up a wall of steel from behind which the eighth army could be evacuated to Japan.

CONTROLS:

May Be Soon

For the first time, a high government official predicted that general wage-price controls will have to be invoked "to avoid damaging inflation." The official was Secretary of the Treasury Snyder.

At a senate finance committee hearing, Snyder said:

"I should say that the situation as it is today, to avoid inflation of a damaging nature, these (general) controls will have to be put into effect."

Alan Valentine, chief of the federal wage-price-control agency, declined to be specific on timing when senators demanded to know what the administration plas to do about rising prices and wage problems.

Valentine told the lawmakers "we must look for and find very soon a plateau where prices and wages are generally in balance. I hope we now are near it."

There had been much private talk about price and wage controls, but this was the first time an official had publicy stated that the time was near at hand. One sad fact must be faced, however. During the past months when it was becomig more and more evident that sooner or later controls would have to be invoked, the administration took no steps to set up the necessary machinery to direct them.

Now that the question is becoming more pressing, there will be another delay while the government mobilizes a staff to direct control activities. In the meanwhile, the small towners of America can expect the price spiral to continue.

A-BOMB:

A Frightened World

A frightened world heard President Truman tell his weekly news conference that the United States would fight on in Korea and would use the atomic bomb if necessary.

Before his remark could be further explained, the capitals of Europe were in an uproar. Fear spread across western Europe like a tidal wave. Newspapers issued extras with black headlines and radio programs were interrupted to put the announcement on the air. Near panic on a world-wide scale was evident for the first time in history.

The President's statement created the impression that he had already given General MacArthur authority to drop the A-bomb whenever he considered it necessary and practical. Some hours later, however a White House statement made it plain that MacArthur had not been given that authority.

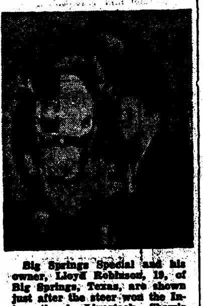
Although the situation had been somewhat cleared, the question of using the atomic bomb and its status in the event of all-out war caused a wave of discussion throughout the world.

Nearly every country in western Europe went on record against using the weapon. These nations obviously feared retaliation in kind from the Russians should the U.S. employ the weapon in the present Korean campaign.

Within the country the question was also top-most in the minds of every American. Most observers believed the public about equally divided on its use. The main argument for its use seemed to be it is the only weapon available that would prevent a disastrous military defeat in Korea and the loss of nearly 100,000 American soldiers.

On the other hand, Americans in every walk of life pointed out that if we used the bomb the Russians might retaliate by bombing American cities and thus launching dreaded World War III.

Champion



Big Springs Special and his owner, Lloyd Robinson, 19, of Big Springs, Texas, are shown just after the steer won the International Livestock Show's championship. The steer was sold for $12 a pound, bringing the youthful owner $12,300. It was a record price for the show.

PROFIT TAX:

House Passes Measure

By a vote of 378 to 20, the house passed an excess-profits tax estimated to bring in $4,600,000,000 from corporations in 1951. The measure is now expected to pass the senate and reach the White House by New Year's.

No one had expected the measure to get action in the lame-duck session of congress. The Korean crisis, however, made immediate action necessary.

BOMB SHELTERS

Congress Gets Shelter Building Plan

The administration asked congress for an appropriation of $3,100,000,000 for building bomb shelters and to finance other measures in the mobilization of the nation's civil defenses.

James J. Wadsworth, a top official of the civil defense administration, said nearly two thirds of the money would go for "communal-type" shelters, designed for protection against atomic warfare. The federal government proposes to match the expenditure of cities and states on a dollar-for-dollar basis in the construction of bomb shelters.

Wadsworth told the senate-house atomic energy committee, that to do less might well result in no shelters or in shelters completely inadequate to cope with the atom bomb.

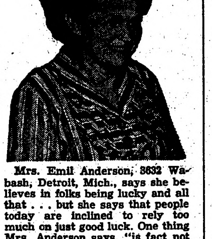
CREOMULSION relieves Coughs, Chest Colds, Acute Bronchitis



Mrs. Emil Anderson, 3632 Wabash, Detroit, Mich., says she believes in folks being lucky and all that . . . but she says that people today are inclined to rely too much on just good luck. One thing Mrs. Anderson says, "is fact not fiction" . . . she isn't going around saying she thanks her lucky stars for feeling so good—No Sir! not Mrs. Anderson—she says she feels so good now because she is taking HADACOL. She was suffering from a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin, and Iron which HADAcol contains.

Here is Mrs. Anderson's own statement:

"For many years now I have had nagging aches and pains not in just a few places but all over my body—in fact I know a person couldn't have felt as miserable as I did.

"I was nervous too—so nervous that I couldn't even darn socks and the worst thing was that I couldn't eat or sleep properly. I would just eat this and that—never a full meal—and my stomach always felt bad. I was so tired all the time—seems like when I would go up two or three steps I would be completely worn out. I was just about at my wits end, not knowing what to do.

"Then while visiting my son and his wife in Morton-Gap, Ky., he told me how his mother-in-law had been helped so much by HADACOL. I brought HADACOL all the way home to Detroit with me. I could tell a big difference after the second bottle. So far I have taken 6 or 7 bottles of HADACOL. What a wonderful change has taken place. I eat well and thoroughly enjoy my food, and sleep—why I can't even stay up late enough to watch all of the television—I just drop off to sleep. I have lots of energy too—now I can even get out in the yard and do the yard work. Yes HADACOL is wonderful—and you can bet your life I will never stop taking HADACOL."

Folks All Over the Country whose systems were deficient in Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin, and Iron, have been helped by HADACOL and HADACOL can help you, too, if you suffer from stomach distress, insomnia caused by upset stomach, vague aches and pains, or a general run-down condition, when they are caused by such deficiencies.

That's the kind of product you want—that's the kind you should buy and that's the kind you should start taking NOW!

Give remarkable HADACOL a chance to benefit you. Remember, you have nothing to lose. HADACOL will make you feel better after the first few bottles you take, or your money will be refunded. Only $1.25 for Trial size; Large Family or Hospital size, $3.50.

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 hospital economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied.—Adv.

To Women With Nagging Backache

As we get older, stress and strain, over-exertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Getting up nights or frequent passages may result from minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or dietary indiscretions.

If your discomforts are due to these causes, don't wait, try Doan's Pills, a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While these symptoms may often otherwise occur, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

CHAPTER I

Her raincoat was white, her high rubber galoshes were white and her umbrella of oiled silk was white with a bright red handle. Ensemble of a well-dressed young woman on a rainy day.

She smiled to herself, a rather wry little smile. She had never had really nice clothes before—bargain-basement stuff that didn't look so bad perhaps—but nothing really nice. And yet—

"Going uptown, Dorinda? I've a couple of letters I wish you'd drop at the post office."

She whirled around, startled, from the half-open door. Why was he always so quiet, she thought, with a quick gust of irritation. A big man, black and white like a Greek, handsome in a heavy, middle-aged sort of way. Not the kind of good looks she admired though many women might. Fay, for instance. He must weigh close to two hundred and yet he moved as softly as a cat.

But there was nothing of impatience in her voice when she spoke. "Of course," and after a barely perceptible pause, "Uncle Edward."

"Thank you, Dorinda."

She looked back into the house. At Fay, watching Edward from the living-room door. At Carol, Grandmother's nurse, hurrying down the stair, a brown-covered book under her arm. She put the book in Dorinda's hand.

"Mrs. Thorndyke asked if you'd change this at the library."

Dorinda smiled back into Carol's black eyes, then opened the door wider and went out.

Dorinda. Well, she was Dorinda. That was what he had said in the beginning. "Look like Dorinda, talk like Dorinda. You are Dorinda. Never forget that."

Dorinda Reviews Story Of Deception's Start

Did Dorinda think, "I like rainy days. . . . They shut me in. . . . I feel safe . . . ?" Not that there was any reason why she shouldn't feel safe. Only the whole situation was so strange. As if one were walking on eggshells or balancing on a tight rope. Mustn't make a misstep. Would Dorinda say this? Would she do this? Five months now and still she felt as if she were an actress playing to an audience, wooing them into an illusion of reality she could not share. Only at night when she went into her room and shut the door could she relax. And times like now, alone and shut in by the rain.

The post office was deserted. Near mail time there were always people, at the ink-spattered table using the rusty pens, or scanning the posters on the walls. "Wanted—for Murder." For this or that. Full face and profile over a number. Five feet eight. Weight one hundred and sixty. Eyes and hair. They never wanted a man for pretending to be someone else. At least not on any poster she had ever seen. It wasn't a crime. Or was it? When pretending wasn't meant to harm, only to help? To help Uncle Edward and Grandmother and Fay? Somehow, she didn't care about helping Fay any more. To be truthful it all boiled down to the fact that she was doing it to help herself, for the money Uncle Edward was paying her.

"I may have a nice nature," she told herself frankly. "But I wouldn't do this for anyone. Not unless I was paid for it. A thousand dollars is a lot of money. My wrist is well and I could get a job now. In a couple of months I'll be back in Los Angeles with money in the bank and a trunk full of clothes. And this will all seem like a dream. Maybe rather a nice dream looking back."

Only there was Cleve. After she went away from here, she could never see Cleve again. Possibly, if he knew, he would understand. But she had promised not to tell, not anyone, ever. When it came time to go, she would go. And Uncle Edward would make the explanations. Cleve would think she didn't care, not even enough to say good-by. Probably he wouldn't want to see her again anyway. That expression his dark eyes held when he looked at her was for Dorinda, Dorinda La Croix who lived in a big house, who was a member of one of the oldest families in the village, who belonged, who wasn't an outsider.

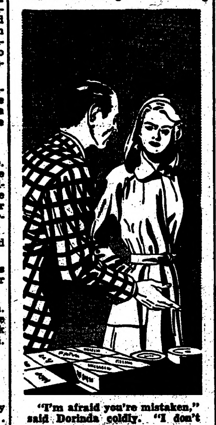
She took her two letters to the window. The post-mistress was little and thin and endowed with a perpetual curiosity. She looked at Dorinda over her glasses and smiled grudgingly. "I wish I looked as pretty as you do on a rainy day. Rain always makes my nose red and my hair stringy even if I did pay ten dollars for a permanent. Here's your stamps."

She watched Dorinda affix the stamps to Uncle Edward's letters. "You don't favor your ma so much. I remember her as well as if I'd seen her yesterday. Just about your age when she married that foreigner and went to Europe to live. She was a brown-eyed blonde like you, only her hair got darker as she grew up. But you don't look like her so much."

She leaned closer. "You were in Paris, weren't you? And got to Lisbon when the Nazis came? And was shipwrecked coming home? I never did hear the straight of it."

"Uncle Edward told all there was to tell. I don't want to think about it." Dorinda slipped the two letters through the letter slot. "I can't talk about it," she repeated. That was what he had told her to say.

"It's natural," he had explained. "You went through a harrowing experience and you don't want to relive it even in memory. You can't talk about it. That way, no one can trip you up on questions.



"I'm afraid you're mistaken," said Dorinda coldly. "I don't know you."

Now she told the postmistress a hurried good-by and went back again into the street. The rain had stopped but the sidewalks were like dark glass, shining and slippery under a black sky.

She went inside the general store which was long and, on this cloudy day, dim, smelling of coal-oil and apples and ham mixed with the pleasant aroma of coffee which a boy was pouring into the red-painted grinder. On the dry-goods side, a girl clerk arranged bolts of cloth on a shelf and farther back the proprietor talked to a salesman, who, his suitcases opened on the counter, listened and nodded in apparent agreement.

Dorinda smiled at the girl who turned at her approach. "Hello, Amy, I'm trying to match some yarn for Grandmother." She opened her handbag. The strand of crimson wool clung to her fingers as she held it out.

Salesman's Recognition Threatens Masquerade

Amy pursed her lips. "I think we've some like that. Only it's a new lot and sometimes the shade's a little different. How is your grandmother?"

"About as usual, I think. She manages to get up in her wheelchair now and then but not often. But she knits and reads and we hope it won't be long until she's up and around again."

As she took the wrapped package, the proprietor moved toward her. "Everything all right, Miss LaCroix? Did you get what you wanted?"

"Oh, yes, Mr. McGregor, exactly what I—" She stopped, her breath catching in a little gasp.

Behind the proprietor, the salesman she had noticed before looked at her, recognition in his eyes. "It's come," she thought wildly. "It's come."

She had thought it couldn't happen. Uncle Edward had said it couldn't happen. The town was only a few hours' drive from Los Angeles, on the coast but away from any major traffic course. People from the town might go to Los Angeles but people from Los Angeles would never come here. Besides, she had known so few people. She didn't know this man really. Only once in her rooming house a girl down the hall had asked her to go on a blind date. Dorinda, lonely as one can be only in a big city, had agreed. This man, she didn't even remember his name, was the blind date. She hadn't liked him, she had refused his plea for another meeting and had, from then until now, forgotten his existence. But she remembered that he was a salesman of some sort. And salesmen did come to small out-of-the-way places.

She looked away from his eager face, hoping against hope that he wouldn't speak to her. Yet steeling herself against the moment when he would.

"Why, Stella!" His voice was hearty, ingratiating. "It's Stella, little Stella—" He snapped his fingers. "What was the name now—Moore, wasn't that it? Last place in the world I expected to see you. Do you live here or what—?"

Dorinda raised her brows, the soft planes of her face stiffening. "I'm afraid you're mistaken," she said coldly. "I don't know you."

His jaw fell ludicrously, then he pulled his lips into a smile again. "Oh, come now, girlie, don't give me the brushoff like that. Don't you remember the night in L. A. at the Hofbrau with Jack and Millie and the fun we had?"

"I'm afraid you're mistaking me for someone else," Dorinda's eyes were like ice.

Mr. McGregor interrupted in a horrified tone. "Taylor, you're wrong. This — this is Miss LaCroix, a niece of Mr. Thorndyke. Thorndykes—one of the oldest families here." He sputtered slightly in his earnestness, striving at once to be convincing and apologetic.

But her heart was pounding. Maybe it was a mistake to come to the village so often. But Uncle Edward had seemed so certain. And it would look peculiar if she never left the house. Of course, a thing like this might not—probably wouldn't—ever happen again. She must in some way find out how often Taylor came here. It should be easy enough to avoid him. But had she really convinced him that he'd made a mistake?

Taylor Accosts Dorinda, Recalls Her Real Name

Her impulse was to hurry home but she remembered that she had one more errand to do—the book to exchange at the circulating library a few doors down the street.

The circulating library was a place Dorinda liked to go. Today, the small square room was like a refuge. A leaping fire in the open grate lit up the bright bindings of the books which lined the walls. A shaded lamp on the big flat-top desk in the middle of the floor shed a circle of orange light against the polished mahogany. The girl at the desk looked up with a smile as Dorinda closed the door.

"Oh, it's lovely in here, Anne." Dorinda laid her book down and went over to the fire. She pulled off her red gloves and stretched out her cold hands to the grateful warmth of the bright flames.

Anne Delahay came and stood beside her. Anne was one of Dorinda's favorite people. She had soft fair hair, wide gray eyes and a low clear voice, the whole enhancing a personality that at their first meeting had aroused an instant response in the other girl. If, Dorinda thought, she were really what she pretended to be, she would have made a friend of Anne. For she sensed Anne felt the attraction, too.

"Isn't it a beast of a day?" Anne was saying now. "What are you doing out, Dorinda?"

"Oh, I like to walk in the rain," Dorinda returned absently.

"You seem to have a follower, Dorinda," Anne said, her lips quirking. "Or a secret admirer, perhaps? Anyway, a strange gent outside seems to be taking a great interest in you."

Dorinda held herself rigid. She would not turn to look at the man she knew must be there. A strange gent. That meant Taylor had followed her. Anne would have known any of the town people. He hadn't, after all, believed her.

She shrugged. "Why have I this strange power over men?" She shook her head at Anne in mock dismay. "I won't encourage him by looking but I think it's a salesman from McGregor's who pretended to mistake me for an old girl friend. Do you suppose that's a variation of the 'haven't I seen you before' gag?"

"Could be," Anne laughed. "Apparently he's still trying to follow it up."

"I'll put a stop to that," Dorinda announced firmly.

Korean Culture

War-torn Korea was once the pipeline of culture in Asia. It was from her that Japan first received the benefit of ancient China's culture and civilization. Korea also helped spread to Japan the philosophy of Buddha, which encouraged art and learning, at a time when Japan was still "a small island nation of farmers, fishermen, and hunters."

OtterTales
By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

Around Christmas time, you get to thinking about what you have to show for a year's work. Well, we didn't have much to show after those sleet and snow storms and the floods last spring except a big repair bill. . .but we still managed to keep things buzzing. In spite of the late spring, we have completed a lot of good, solid system improvements. The boys on our crews teamed up with several contractor's crews to put up some 440 miles of new or completely rebuilt transmission line. We have put almost a million dollars into rebuilding distribution facilities in towns in our system. We got a good start on our new 115,000 volt network which is going to benefit customers all over the Otter Tail system. And our new $8,500,000 15,000 kilowatt plant at Ortonville went into operation. . .providing you with assurance of an ample supply of power. Then, of course, there was the $5,000,000 bond issue we floated at such a low rate of interest. That made us feel pretty good, because it showed investor confidence in Otter Tail as a pretty solid outfit.

These are some of the highlights as we look back. It's pretty hard to see what's ahead right now with all the storm clouds . . .but there is a hopeful spirit that comes with Christmas for a brighter tomorrow. And that's what we're building for, So—

Check Your Chest

"Check Your Chest—Make Sure You Are Safe from TB." This is today's most popular slogan in the fight against tuberculosis. More than a million and a half Minnesotans have been X-rayed in mass surveys throughout the state since the all-out program started to X-ray all residents of Minnesota. Funds raised through the sale of Christmas Seals help make possible this program to discover tuberculosis early.

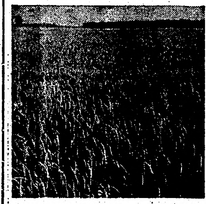
Plant Food Added in Fall Boosts Wheat and Hay Production

OHIO agronomists recommend fertilizing wheat and meadow crops this fall with 400 to 600 pounds of plant food per acre.

They say this soil treatment will pay for itself in increased wheat yields alone.

What fertilizer to use depends on your crop rotation and the soil's productive level. Where wheat is grown in rotation with alfalfa or other soil-building, nitrogen-fixing legumes, the agronomists recommend fertilizer containing only phosphate and potash. They list grades such as 0-12-12 and 0-20-20.



Well-Fertilized Soil Yields Bumper Wheat Crop.

For less productive soils, the agronomists recommend a complete fertilizer containing nitrogen, phosphate and potash. Here they suggest grades such as 3-12-12, 4-12-8 or 4-16-8. Nitrogen is particularly needed where wheat is grown in rotations including mostly small grains, corn or soybeans. The agronomists say it is advisable to add nitrogen where heavy crop residues such as oats straw are plowed down for wheat.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman, Attlee Outline Program Of 'Peace Without Appeasement'; Korean Picture Remains Serious

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

The four men above have concluded a conference that may become known as the last stand of democracy. For five days, President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee (seated) conferred on the present world crisis. President Truman was advised by Secretary of State Acheson and Secretary of Defense Marshall (standing). Peace without appeasement was the theme of the conference.

ATTLEE-TRUMAN:

A Joint Statement

President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee concluded their historic five-day conference on the theme of "peace without appeasement". It was impossible, however, to evaluate the results of the meeting in the light of swiftly moving events. It suffices to say the two nations gained a clearer view of mutual problems and possible future action.

A 10-point statement was issued at the conclusion of the conference:

1. Economic and military aid to the non-Communist nations in south-east Asia will go forward despite the Communist onslaught against Korea.

2. The United States and Britain "will act together with resolution and unity to meet the challenge to peace which recent weeks have made clear to all."

3. "We are in complete agreement that there can be no thought of appeasement or of rewarding aggression, whether in the far east or elsewhere."

4. Although both Nationalist China and the Chinese Communist regime are reluctant to let the U.N. consider Formosa's future, "consideration of this question by the U.N. will contribute to peace and security."

5. The U.S. opposes and continues to oppose admission of Red China to the U.N. while Britain "considers its (the Red Chinese) representatives should occupy China's seat." But they are determined this split will not hurt their "unified effort."

6. "Every effort" must be made to end the Korean fighting by peaceful means but only "on the basis of a free and independent Korea.

7. If the Chinese Communists reject peaceful negotiation, the U. N. must "decide" what to do, with British and American support.

8. The U.S. and Britain are in "complete agreement" on the need for immediate action by the 12 North Atlantic pact nations to intensify their defense preparations.

9. The two nations must expand arms production as quickly as possible and continue to work out arrangements for sharing the defense burden.

10. A supreme commander for the combined North Atlantic armies should be appointed soon.

Appointment

Joseph H. Short, Jr., veteran Washington correspondent, was named presidential press secretary following the recent death of Charles G. Ross. Short is being congratulated by Stephen T. Early who acted as press secretary until Truman filled the post.

KOREA:

What's the Next Move?

The military picture in Korea was still serious. The U. S. eighth army withdrew successfully from North Korea and established defense positions below the 38th parallel and north of Seoul. The first marine division, British units and small groups of U.S. army troops reached Hamhung after a 50-mile retreat in sub-zero cold.

The first marines thus escaped the Communist trap sprung by six divisions, but not without heavy casualties. Although no official totals were announced, military observers estimated the marines suffered as many as 6,000 killed and wounded.

What is the next move, observers were asking themselves? Several things were possible, including a defense line at the 38th parallel and an all-out battle, a small beachhead around Inchon and Seoul which could be held with the aid of navy support, and exacuation of all U.N. troops from the peninsula.

General MacArthur was of the opinion that U.N. troops could hold off heavy Chinese attacks for the time being, but warned in effect they could not do it for long.

The general seemed to be saying the same thing that had come repeatedly from the fighting front—that the Chinese must be halted politically or the Allies strengthened in Korea before U.N. troops can hold out for any length of time.

Rumors had circulated in the United Nations that the Chinese would stop their offensive at the 38th parallel. No official statement was made by the Reds, however, and most observers did not expect them to do so.

One ugly fact could not be denied by the free nations of the world: Communist China, if it wants to spill enough blood, can probably throw the U.N. armies out of Korea and into the sea. It is a humiliating prospect.

RENT CONTROL:

Extended 90 Days

Much to the surprise of many observers, the house and senate approved a 90-day extension of the federal rent-control law.

The senate's action on the bill must still be ratified by the house, but that approval was expected without trouble.

The new legislation replaced the federal rent-control law that expired at the end of December except in communities that decided to continue them through June 30.

The three-month extension provision is exactly what Truman requested. He told congress a 90-day continuance would give the lawmakers time next year to consider the whole rent problem in relation to other inflation controls.

FARM BUREAU

Farm Bureau Speakers Rap Controls

Speakers at the American Farm Bureau Federation convention in Dallas, Tex., said the American farmer doesn't want either price controls or rationing.

Federation President Allan B. Kline said, "Price control does not control inflation. It is the handmaiden of inflation. It covers up." He suggested higher taxes as an inflation control.

E. Howard Hill, Iowa Farm Bureau president, said polls in his state show the people don't want rationing. He also said "price ceilings do not control inflation in the least."

H. H. Alp, director of the federation's poultry division, said an advisory committee "recommends that there be no price ceilings and rationing."

U.S.A., 1951:

What's in Store?

With 1951 but a few days away a number of observers paused long enough to ask the question of what is life in the United States going to be like during the coming year, assuming we have still managed to avert a third world war?

The assumption that the U. S. will not be involved in war during 1951 is taking the optimistic view of world events. But if that should be the case, the future shapes up something like this:

Cost of living will be higher, perhaps by as much as six per cent, even with price and wage controls.

Food will be ample, including luxuries, at higher prices. When incomes are high, people not only eat more, but eat better.

High grade wool for clothing will be scarce and nylon goods will be in tight supply.

House furnishings quality will deteriorate, and some items will not be available.

Automobile production will be far below 1950's eight million or more.

There should be enough gasoline to go around, but the quality is likely to be somewhat lower.

There will be more jobs than job-hunters and most workers will be working longer hours.

Taxes will be a good deal higher for individuals and corporations. An excess-profits tax is almost certain.

Consumer credit controls will be tougher, meaning larger down payments even than now and shorter payment periods.

All of which means, according to the experts, a lower standard of living for the average American and an austerity program for the country generally.

HARRY GOLD:

End of Sordid Story

The end of the sordid story of Harry Gold, 40, confessed member of a Russian espionage ring, was written in a U. S. court. He was sentenced to 30 years in prison.

After the trial, Gold said in a statement that he had made a "terrible mistake" and added that he had received the "most scrupulously fair trial and treatment."

"Most certainly," he said, "that could never have happened in the Soviet Union or any of the countries dominated by it."

Gold admitted during his trial of turning over to Soviet agents vital defense secrets and data on atomic research obtained by British scientists Dr. Klaus Fuchs.

The convicted man said he was concerned over the fact that "those who mean so much to me have been the worst besmirched by my deeds—my country, my family and friends, my former classmates at Xavier University (Cincinnati) and the Jesuits there, and the people at the heart station of Philadelphia General Hospital.

BUSINESS:

Record Investment

The commerce department in a recent report said American business plans to invest $4,800,000,000 in new factories, machinery and other equipment during the first quarter of 1951, setting a record for that season.

"On the basis of preliminary returns, if plans for the year as a whole are realized, 1951 capital outlays will be higher than in any previous year," the department said.

The present full-year record; $19,230,000,000, was established in booming 1948. In 1949, a recession year, expansion outlays fell to $18,100,000,000. 1950 is expected to be about the same as last year.

The report also showed a sharp pickup in business spending for new plants and equipment since the outbreak of the Korean war last June.

If plans uncovered in the department survey are carried out, expansion outlays in the first quarter of 1951 will be 30 per cent above the first quarter of 1950. All major industries will be contributing to the increase.

Stabilizer

Michael DiSalle, mayor of Toledo, O., was named by President Truman to serve as director of price stabilization. The post assumed increasing importance with continued rumors that price-wage controls would be clamped on in the near future.

ACCIDENTS:

442,970 Killed

Automobiles slaughtered more Americans in the past 14 years than have been killed or fatally wounded in all the wars in U. S. history including latest available casualty figures from Korea, reported the Northwestern National Life Insurance company.

In the same period automobiles injured 13 times as many Americans as wounded in all United States wars.

DON'T S'KID YOURSELF

Winter Tests Indicate Chains Are Safer Than New Safety Tires

There has been an alarming upswing in traffic accidents during recent years. And the most disturbing aspect of the highway accident picture, according to the automotive safety foundations, is the mounting ratio of rural fatalities. Excessive speed and inadequate control by police and the courts are cited as the underlying factors in last year's record, showing rural traffic deaths outnumbering urban fatalities by about two and one half to one.

Winter, the most dangerous season of the year on American highways, is in full force throughout the nation. Highways in many areas have never been so dangerous.

How slippery and dangerous is an icy road compared to a snowy one? How safe are "winter" tires? How do they actually compare with tire chains?

In an effort to answer these and other important questions for the benefit of the puzzled motorist, the National Safety Council's committee on winter driving hazards conducted a two-week series of tests at Pine Lake, near Clintonville, Wis., last winter. Results are now compiled and are being made public for the first time.

2,000 Tests Run

Nearly 2,000 individual test runs were made to test 22 representative tread designs of various tires for stopping, "go" traction, and cornering ability on snow and ice. The special "winter" tires fall into three classifications: (1) Those with specially impregnated treads containing "breakout" material such as sawdust, peanut shells or rock salt; others have steel wool, chips or steel coils embedded which is intended to be "abrasive"; (2) surface treatment consisting of multiple lacerations, knife or saw cuts, and (3) various shapes of knobs, studs, lugs or ribs. All are supposed to give surer footing on the variety of slick or impassable surfaces encountered by winter drivers.

Ross G. Wilcox, traffic engineer for the National Safety Council, in summarizing the results, said that in general, while the performance of some of the specialized tires showed a definable improvement for some specific conditions over regular tires, their over-all improvement was not great enough to warrant less care or elimination of tire chains when driving on slippery surfaces.

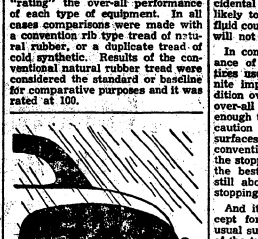
"As an example, the stopping distance on glare ice of the best specialized tire tested is still about eight times the stopping distance on dry concrete," Wilcox said.

"We found that steel tire chains of the reinforced type are far superior to the best of the special winter tires tested on snow and ice, and show a consistent improvement over conventional natural rubber tires averaging 46 per cent in stopping ability, and 475 per cent in tractive ability."

The tests also showed, he said, that natural rubber is 10 per cent to 50 per cent superior to cold synthetic rubber in stopping and traction on snow and ice, although synthetic is about 7 per cent superior to natural rubber in cornering speed (resistance to side skids) on ice. Most passenger car tires in use today, and those now being manufactured have treads that are all or part "cold synthetic rubber," which wears better. Truck tires need and do have more natural rubber.

Tests Summary

Averaging test results of all types on both glare ice and loosely packed snow, both for stopping, turning, and forward traction ability, the engineers established a system of "rating" the over-all performance of each type of equipment. In all cases comparisons were made with a convention rib type tread of natural rubber, or a duplicate tread of cold synthetic. Results of the conventional natural rubber tread were considered the standard or baseline for comparative purposes and it was rated at 100.



Use tire chains on ice and snow. They cut braking distances on cars and trucks 40 to 70 per cent and provide needed "go" traction. Even with definite help of chains, careful driving is necessary.

Keep your windshield and windows clear of snow and ice, fog and frost. Be sure your headlights, windshield-wiper blades, and defrosters are in good working order. You must see danger to avoid it.

Results of the "performance summary" showed:

Conventional natural rubber tires, 100; conventional cold synthetic tires, 89; winterized tires, 108; mud-snow tires, 113; winterized mud-snow tires, 126; tire chains on ordinary tires, 286.

On some tests, and on some surfaces, Wilcox noted, some of the special winter tires actually were inferior in performance to regular tires.

The test revealed that changing temperatures or sunshine made a big difference, as much as 130 per cent, in skid distances on ice. At four degrees below zero, for example, tires without chains may stop in about 110 feet; but the same care, at the same 20 m.p.h speed, takes about 250 feet on the same ice at around 30 degrees above zero. This variable has led many a driver to disaster. He thinks he's pretty skillful, after no trouble on near zero ice, only to lose control a little later. When the sun comes out, for example, and puts a moist film on the ice or hard-packed snow, then look out. This, engineers point out, is another reason for chains. Their performance is comparatively consistent from zero to melting point on ice or snow.

Other Tests Made

The special winter tires were not tested on hard packed snow. That will be done in official tests this winter. Previous committee tests showed that regular tires skid about 75 feet on traffic-packed snow at 20 m.p.h. after brakes are applied, and tire chains about 38 feet.

"The tests likewise showed," Wilcox said, "that cars with hydraulic and fluid couplings with standard, automatic, or semi-automatic transmissions lend themselves to better control on ice than cars with convention clutch and transmission.

"With the conventional clutch and transmission on wet ice, which is very slippery, a hard brake application can lock the rear wheels just long enough to stall the engine, which will hold the rear wheels in a locked condition and may cause the car to go into a spin. This accidental stalling of the engine is not likely to occur with a hydraulic or fluid coupling, and if it should occur, will not lock the rear wheels."

In conclusion, while the performance of several of the specialized tires used in the test showed definite improvement for specific condition over conventional tires, their over-all improvement is not great enough to warrant less care or precaution when driving on slippery surfaces with these tires than with conventional tires. As an example, the stopping distance on glare ice of the best specialized tire tested is still about eight times the normal stopping distance on dry concrete.

And it must be stressed that except for several specific and unusual surface conditions, tire chains of the type used in the tests are far superior to the best of the tires tested on snow and ice, showing an improvement over conventional natural rubber tires averaging 46 per cent in stopping ability and 475 per cent in traction ability.

These tests by the National Safety Council's committee on winter driving hazards were made to end confusion over conflicting claims which involve traffic safety during winter months.

Smart Motorists Get the Feel of Road

A smart motorist will drive carefully in bad winter weather. It is good for the driver to get the "feel" of the road by trying his brakes while driving slowly and when no other vehicles are near. And it is important to adjust speed to road and weather conditions. Slow down on wet, snowy or icy roads so the automobile can be stopped when needed. As a final caution Motorists are warned to follow other vehicles at a safe distance—remembering that without chains it takes from three to 12 times as far to stop on snow and ice as on dry concrete.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Stella Moore, unemployed secretary, masquerading as Dorinda LaCroix, is recognized by a salesman with whom she once went out on a date. Stella has taken the position because she has been told it will help keep the real Dorinda's grandmother alive. Dorinda died in a life boat as she and her uncle Edward were returning to the United States after the Nazis had invaded Paris where Dorinda was living. Stella's masquerade is known only to Edward Thorndyke and his cousin, the beautiful Fay, who is in love with Edward and plans to marry him. Anne Delahay, town librarian and Stella's friend, notes the salesman has been following Stella. She tells Stella that the man showed a suspicious interest in her.

CHAPTER II

But when she came out of the library, Taylor had gone. If he were lurking somewhere near, she did not see him.

She was, she congratulated herself, rid of him. But when she came into the open country once more, it seemed to her she could hear footsteps behind her. She listened intently and knew she was right. Someone followed her, someone who hurried when she hurried, lagged when she lagged.

She stopped short. It was probably his intention to follow her home. But they might as well have it out now. Perhaps she might even yet make him believe she was what she pretended to be.

He came closer to her. He had a sallow, fox-like face, exultant now, as if he felt in waiting for him she had admitted that he was, after all, no stranger to her as she had claimed so short a time before.

"Hello, Miss LaCroix alias Miss Moore, alias—or is that all? What's the game really? Are you Miss Moore masquerading as Miss LaCroix or was Miss La Croix merely having a little fling in town as Miss Moore? So you've decided to wait and talk it over, eh?"

Uncle Edward Perturbed By Dorinda's Report

"I wanted to be done with this once and for all," Dorinda said shortly. "I don't know whether you're sincere in pretending you know me or not. But I do know that if you follow me any farther, I shall complain to the police. I fancy it wouldn't do you any good with your employers if you were arrested for annoying one of Mr. McGregor's customers."

He glared at her through narrowed lids. "So you're going to bluff it out, are you? Don't you think I know that you and the Moore girl are one and the same? Maybe you're up to some kind of racket. I wouldn't know. Come on, admit you're stalling."

"You heard what I said." Dorinda's voice gave no indication of the panic inside her. "I'm going into town again and lodge a complaint against you." She took a step back toward the village.

Although it was not yet six o'clock, darkness had fallen when Dorinda turned in at the Thorndyke gate. Windows were pale yellow oblongs in the dark walls of the house.

Inside warmth closed in about her. The softness of thick red carpeting under her feet, the paneled walls of dark oak, even the curving graciousness of the wide stairway, and best of all, the closed door behind her that shut out the darkness, gave her the feeling of a small animal that, pursued by the hounds, has at last reached safe haven.

The illusion of sanctuary was shattered as Edward Thorndyke appeared in the door of the living room. Odd, she was like this with him. At first there had been a strangeness, naturally, but as the weeks went by, the strangeness was gone. For a while she was more at ease with him than with anyone else—they were partners in a harmless conspiracy. Not even with Fay had she had that feeling of partnership, for she was aware of Fay's disapproval even though Fay had in the beginning persuaded her to come here.

There was a riffle in Edward's suaveness when he spoke. "You're late, Dorinda. I don't like this—your being out in the dark. I was afraid something had happened."

"I want to talk to you," Dorinda said.

Edward looked at her keenly. "Come in here," he said brusquely and stood back to let her precede him into the living room.

"Let's have it." His eyes were black in the firelight, his mouth unpleasantly red against the mat whiteness of his face.

"I saw someone who knew me—not really knew me—but had been out with me one time back in Los Angeles." The words stumbled on her lips. She had done nothing, yet her impulse was toward apology.

Whatever he had expected, it had not been this. Wariness touched his face, wariness and an emotion almost akin to anger. "But you told me you knew nobody there!"

"I didn't. Not really know anyone. But even though I wasn't there long, there had to be some contacts. This—this was a salesman who took me out to dinner once."

"But you'd known him before that?"

"No, I only saw him the one time. You see—"

He interrupted her, a note of relief in his voice. "Here's Fay. She'd better hear this."

Fay, beautiful, disturbing Fay. Dorinda remembered the first time she had seen her in that dingy office room ten stories above the street. She had thought then that Fay surely must be the loveliest woman in all the world. She wasn't young—in the middle or late thirties perhaps, though you never thought of age in connection with her. But it had taken years, more than youth could know, to acquire that finished, flawless perfection of her strange beauty.

"We've run into a little trouble," he said shortly. "Whether it's serious or not I don't know. Go on, Dorinda. Wait, where's Harriet and Lana, Fay? We don't want them bursting in on this."

"Upstairs," she told him.

Edward Thorndyke had been at the desk.

"Lana's dressing and Harriet's helping. You know—or rather you don't know—what a complicated process that is. They'll be occupied for another hour at least."

"Good." He turned back to Dorinda, nodded for her to go on.

Stammering a little under their close and undivided attention, she recounted the happenings of the afternoon. "And I couldn't make him believe me," she finished, a little desperately.

It must have been a full minute before Fay's husky voice punctured the silence.

"Evidently this man, this salesman, is determined to make trouble. But I don't see what he can do if we act wisely ourselves." Her vivid eyes shifted to Edward's face. "I think it's time for the final curtain, anyway, Edward. After all, we've accomplished as much as we hoped to do. Your mother is much better, as well in all probability as she will ever be. Don't you agree with me?"

He bent his head in acquiescence.

Dorinda Recalls Details Leading To Taking Job

"I expect you're right. I had planned to wait a little longer but perhaps this way is best. We'll send my little 'niece'"—he smiled at Dorinda—"back to town in a couple of days. Will you be sorry to go, my dear?"

"No," she said simply. "I'll be glad. Instead of being easier, this masquerade, as Fay calls it, has been getting more difficult all the time. I guess I wasn't meant for deceit."

Edward sighed. "I was afraid you felt like that."

"What are you talking about, Edward?" Fay asked sharply. "There's no question of her staying on indefinitely, no reason for it, is there?"

"Of course not. Well, we'll say nothing more about it just now, Dorinda, and in another day or two, we'll make arrangements to wind the whole thing up. After all, there's no hurry. Your salesman probably doesn't make this town more than once a month."

There was dismissal in his tone and, accepting it, the girl rose and without looking back at the two who remained by the fire, went out of the room.

She saw a flutter of white as she rounded the turn in the stair. Mrs. Thorndyke's nurse came down a few steps to meet her. "I was looking for you, Miss Dorinda. Mrs. Thorndyke has been asking for you. Stop and see her for a little while before you go down to dinner, will you?"

"Of course, Carol." Mrs. Thorndyke, Dorinda thought, was the one person about whom she had no mental reservations. She really loved her. During these last few months she had almost come to believe that Grandmother really did belong to her. She'd hate leaving her. And Cleve? It was as if a voice whispered the words. She pushed the thought away from her. She wouldn't, she mustn't, think about him.

Eighteen months before, Stella Moore, not yet become Dorinda, had lost both father and mother in one fatal accident when the car in which they were riding stalled on the track before an eastbound train. In that single moment, the girl's whole life had changed. She had been preparing herself for college the following year. Now she had to prepare instead to earn her own living. The small amount of money left had been barely enough to take her through business school and to bring her to Los Angeles.

So she came to the city. But it didn't prove a city of the angels to her. She found work readily enough but she made no friends and she was almost unbearably lonely. And then a final misfortune occurred. She fell and broke her wrist.

It was not a complicated fracture. With the aid of youth and good blood, it was healing rapidly, but it would be weeks before she could use it. She had only a little money left. And what kind of work could a stenographer with a broken wrist do? She had about come to the conclusion that there was none when she saw the advertisement.

"Wanted," it said, "young woman to appear in amateur play. Must be brown-eyed blonde. Ability to speak French essential. No experience required. Excellent pay." And the address.

Dorinda 'Exact Type' Needed for Scheme

It was an answer to prayer. An amateur play. A weak wrist wouldn't be a detriment there. And she could speak French—she'd been brought up on French. Her father, a soldier in the last war, had married a pretty Parisian—her mother—and brought her home.

But her heart had sunk when she reached the address, for the office room and even the hall outside was thronged with blondes, real and synthetic, pretty and plain. It was evident she wasn't the only girl in Los Angeles who wanted an easy job. Or perhaps all these others had theatrical ambitions. Surely there couldn't be much chance for her.

Edward Thorndyke had been at the desk. Many of the girls he dismissed with only a cursory glance, without even reading over the answers on the printed form. "Not the type," she could hear him say curtly.

By the time Stella Moore reached the desk, there had been four girls instructed to wait. She made a fifth and Edward had said, "That's all I can see today."

The four other girls were all, like herself, brown-eyed blondes. Edward had sent them, one at a time, into an inner office room. They must have left by another door for none of them came back.

Fay had said at once. "You're exactly the type we want, Miss"—she consulted the form she held in her hand—"Miss Moore."

She had questioned the girl briefly, then explained to her, as, Stella Moore learned later, she had not explained to any of the others. They did want an actress for an amateur play, but it was a very peculiar sort of amateur play.

Fay touched past history sketchily. Old Mrs. Thorndyke, who suffered from a long-standing heart ailment, had been seriously affected by the death of her daughter, Laura LaCroix, in France. Not only that but she had worried about the situation of her granddaughter, Dorinda. Dorinda's father had died years before and upon the death of her mother, she was left without even sufficient funds to come to the United States. Laura had lived well, even extravagantly, but her income was derived from a trust fund which terminated at her death.

Of course, Fay explained, they could have wired money to France, but Dorinda was only twenty, frail and inexperienced, fearful of the trip. War was imminent. It had eventually been decided Edward would go after her and bring her home.

Wires had been pulled, passport difficulties overcome. But it had all taken time and Edward had reached Paris and taken Dorinda away only a few hours before the Nazis marched in. They reached Lisbon, and, after some delay, secured passage on a homebound vessel. There were days of strain, a darkened ship, constant fear. And then the ship was torpedoed. They spent a week in an open boat. Just before the rescue came, Dorinda died.

In the confusion her death was never reported.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Regardless of how young or small your baby is, you can weigh him or her quite accurately on an ordinary bathroom floor scale. Climb on the scale with the mite in your arms and make a note of the weight that shows up. Then step on the scale empty-handed. The net difference between the two weighings is, of course, the weight of your bambino.

When cork coasters get old, water soaks through them, defeating the purpose of the coaster. Put a stop to the whole thing by coating the bottom side of each coaster with colorless nail polish.

Youngsters who spill food (and can you name one who doesn't?) should have place mats that can be thrown away when they're soiled. And they can have them if you save empty cardboard cake boxes and cut the mats out of them.

If you use a pail of clean, dry sand as a storage place for small garden tools, you will retard rust. There are several effective ways to stiffen crocheted doilies and baskets. All involve dipping in something. One mixture calls for a tablespoonful of flour, tablespoonful of cornstarch, two-thirds of a cup of salt and a cup of water. Put it on the stove and stir it until it comes to a boil. When it's cool enough to handle, dip the basket in it. Easier solutions for the dipping are epsom salt (saturated), melted paraffin, laundry starch, or a thick sugar syrup. Whichever you use, dip the basket in; then shape it over a bowl of the appropriate size and let it dry (and stiffen) right on the bowl.

If sparrows and other birds congregate outside the nursery window and wake the baby up too early, hang a cheesecloth sack full of mothballs as close as possible to the place where the birds convene. That'll make them decide to go hire a hall.

To soften a new rope clothes line and to make it last longer, boil it in soap and water for five minutes before using it for the first time.

Pennies are "Big Money"

Maybe pennies don't look like much with all this talk about "millions" and "billions". But think for a minute in terms of value received for the pennies spent for electric service.

For a few pennies a day, you wash and iron your clothes, sew, refrigerate, houseclean and handle many other household tasks.

Yes, pennies are big money . . . big because the electric industry has made them that way. While living costs hit new highs, the cost of electricity has continued to drop each year.

Remember, Reddy Kilowatt power -- the electricity produced by your business-managed, tax-paying private utility company -- is the best buy in your family budget.

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

Forage Yields Upped 500 Per Cent With Lime and Fertilizer

"GET reckless with fertilizer if you want to make the most profit from crop and pasture land," advises Ray Wetherell, Fairfield county, Ohio, dairyman. He says it is cheaper than paying for extra land and labor.

Wetherell practices what he preaches, for he used about 60 tons of fertilizer last year, reports Dr. D. R. Dodd, Ohio State University extension agronomist.

Wetherell has found that it pays to add just as much fertilizer to pasture land as to crop land. By renovating a badly rundown permanent pasture two years ago, he increased production fivefold. On this field he seeded a nurse crop with a mixture of alfalfa, Ladino clover and bromegrass. At seeding time he added 400 pounds per acre of 3-12-12. Then at the beginning of the second year he top-dressed with 500 pounds per acre of 0-12-12.

High quality hay and pasture, plus expert grazing management, are key items in the success of Wetherell's dairy farm, says Dr. Dodd. Wetherell figures his 60 Jersey cows will finish the year with a herd average of more than 400 pounds of butter fat.

Wetherell gives his corn crop plenty of fertilizer, too. He plows under 500 pounds per acre of 8-8-8 and then adds 350 pounds of 3-12-12 in the row at planting time. His 4-year rotation includes corn, small grain and two years of legume-grass crop for hay, grass silage and pasture.

War Threats Spur Need for Building Up Soil Fertility

THREATS of war heighten the need for putting farm soil in top condition to produce high crop yields, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in a statement made public here.

Legumes, fertilizers, soil-saving rotations and conservation tillage methods are the tools for building and maintaining the soil's crop producing capacity, the committee points out.

By strengthening the soil's reserves of organic matter and stockpiling supplies of plant nutrients in the soil now, farmers can be ready if things get really tough later on, the statement says.

"Farm soil took a beating in World War II," it says. "Soil-depleting forces worked overtime after Pearl Harbor when every acre had to produce food to the utmost to help speed victory.

"Although fertilizer use has risen to an all-time high in the years since the war, crop demands have been taking more plant nutrients from the soil than have been added to it. 'Put back' methods that replace these nutrients and build a well-balanced supply of plant food in the soil are vital in the months ahead."

Several US States Are Large As Korea

To visualize divided Korea, consider comparisons with several states of the United States.

Minnesota, Idaho, Utah, or Kansas—any of these—matches Korea for size. Indiana corresponds in area to United States-sponsored South Korea—the three-sevenths of the embattled country that lies south of the 38th parallel. New York state is about the same size as Communist-controlled North Korea.

Florida, with two-thirds the area of Korea, bears resemblance since both are southward-pointing peninsulas of roughly similar outlines on the map. The Delmarva Peninsula (the Chesapeake Bay's "eastern shore") shares Korea's latitude, both being cut south of center by the 38th parallel.

West Virginia belongs in the act, since Korea is similarly covered throughout with mountains. Korea's mountains reach somewhat higher and are generally less forested than those of West Virginia. South Korea, only one-half larger than West Virginia, has 10 times the population of that state, and this population is competing for a bare subsistence on the overcrowded land of its valleys.

Ancient Hammurabi might be called the first postmaster general. The Babylonian king had a regular "postal service" between towns. His "postmen" were foot-runners; his "letters," clay tablets, addressed and stamped with the official seal of the sender.

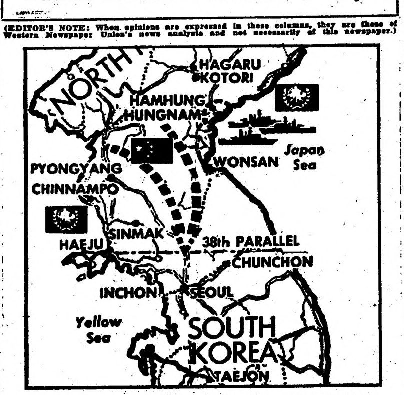
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

A State of National Emergency Is Proclaimed by President Truman; Russia Threatens Western Europe

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



Chinese Communists in the mountains of central North Korea prepared for another big sweep down the middle of Korea (broken arrow). Meanwhile, 60,000 United Nations troops were evacuated from the Hamhung-Hungnam beachhead after withdrawing from the Yalu river.

EMERGENCY:
Near-War Footing

With a series of proclamations and executive orders, President Truman put the nation on a near-war footing. In a world-wide radio address the President proclaimed a national emergency and told the American people they must pay higher taxes, work longer hours, and give up many civilian goods to speed up the defense program.

"Our home, our nation, all the things we believe in, are in great danger," the President said in his address.

"The future of civilization depends on what we do—on what we do now and in the months ahead."

He announced the administration would impose some wage-price controls and bring 3,500,000 men under arms "as soon as possible."

Then he outlined the buckling-down program:

1. Compulsory price ceilings "at once" on some items essential to defense production and the cost of living.

2. Voluntary ceilings over rest of the economy of publishing "fair standards of prices and wages."

3. To provide the necessary materials for defense production, a "cut back on many lines of civilian production" and expanded output of steel, copper, aluminum, electric power, and agricultural commodities.

4. Workers to labor more hours.

5. Still further taxes.

6. Federal spending for non-defense purposes slashed "to the minimum" in the fiscal 1952 budget.

Within hours after the declaration of a national emergency, the President created the Office of Defense Mobilization by executive order. The new office was given unprecedented power with full authority over civilian agencies already at work building United States war strength. Truman named Charles E. Wilson to head the agency. Wilson was president of General Electric.

Also within hours after the President's proclamation, the Economic Stabilization Agency froze the price of new automobiles at the level of December 1, 1950. The action rolled back price increases averaging five per cent announced by Ford, Chrysler, General Motors, and Nash, on the 1951 models.

The automobile industry protested the price roll-back and stopped the sale of some makes. Observers did not believe the protest would carry much weight in Washington.

Most observers believed the President had set the stage for further drastic curbs. There is no doubt but that a speed-up in rearmament—to suit the quickening tempo of the Kremlin time-table—will cause economic injuries. Some people are going to lose jobs. Some business men are going to lose money. And all Americans are going to find life a lot tougher.

Some observers believed it may be necessary to cut back civilian production as much as 30 to 50 per cent before war production can go into high gear.

Marines

The first truckloads of U. S. 1st marine division are shown above as they rolled into the area near Hamhung after their 12-day battle to free themselves from the death trap set by Chinese and North Korean Communists near the Changjin reservoir.

EUROPE:
Reds Threaten

The Soviet Union did not say exactly what it would do, but in notes to Great Britain and France warned that the rearmament of Germany would not be tolerated. The threat brought a new feeling of crisis to western Europe.

The Kremlin sent notes to Britain and France which asserted:

1. Arming of Germans by Atlantic allies would violate the Potsdam pact of 1945.

2. Western Germany's inclusion in the Atlantic pact setup would invalidate Russia's alliance treaties with Britain and France.

A number of observers were asking if the Soviet warning wasn't the kind Red China made—and later fulfilled—as United Nations forces crossed the 38th parallel in Korea. Others, however, do not think the Communists are ready for all-out war.

The note is having its effect on western Europe and may slow down the execution of defense plans.

London described the Soviet note as a "patently tactical device" timed to coincide with the Brussels meeting.

MARSHALL:
Opposes Full Mobilization

Defense Secretary Marshall is reported opposed to full mobilization now because there is still "a hope" that World War III may be averted.

Marshall's careful appraisal of the powder-keg world situation was given to a house appropriations subcommittee at a secret hearing.

However, Marshall said he also believes that the United States must build up its armed forces to just-short-of-war footing as swiftly as possible because "a single word" from the Kremlin could start the holocaust at any time.

The defense secretary did not say exactly how far he believed U. S. mobilization should go. But he said the present goal of 2,771,000 men under arms by next July 1 must be increased substantially.

WAR FUNDS

House Approves Huge Defense Measure

The house approved and sent to the senate a "first installment" defense appropriation amounting to $17,809,304,424. The Senate was expected to act on the bill within a matter of days.

The huge appropriation included $16,845,181,000 for the army, navy and air force—exactly what President Truman asked. The atomic energy commission got $840 million to augment its fast expanding A-bomb and H-bomb program.

Meanwhile, the "second installment" on the gigantic preparedness program was rapidly taking shape. President Truman sent to congress a new request for $1,834,911,000 to add war-needed materials to the nation's stockpile. The house began study of the bill immediately.

UNITED NATIONS:
Political Stalemate

Although there was much less tension in the capitals of the world diplomats at the United Nations continued to work feverishly in an attempt to head off a world-wide conflict. No workable solution for stopping the Korean war had been found, however, and the organization seemed locked in a political stalemate.

Russia declared that all foreign troops, including Chinese Communists "volunteers," should be withdrawn from Korea, but voted against a cease-fire proposal which the United Nations political committee approved by a vote of 51 to 5.

Russia's delegates harked again and again to the argument that the cease-fire formula was aimed at "saving the skins" of western troops—at providing a "breathing spell" during which Gen. Douglas MacArthur's forces could "reform their ranks" in preparation for a new attack.

The general assembly went ahead with its cease-fire plan by naming a three-man committee to seek the truce. Most observers believed they would not succeed.

ACHESON:
Ouster Demanded

Secretary of State Dean Acheson flew to Brussels for a meeting with representatives of the Atlantic pact nations amid renewed pressure on the home front that he be fired from the state department.

The latest move for his ouster was made by senate and house Republicans. There was no White House comment on the Republican resolution.

Administration officials, however, reported President Truman was "absolutely determined" to stand by Acheson for the reason that he has served him exceptionally well. Some quarters reported the President considered the attack on Acheson to be an attack on the administration's foreign policy.

Acheson was reported to have said he would not resign and that he was making the Brussels trip because he felt the European peoples needed to be reassured that the United States is determined to help build up their defenses.

Some political observers expressed the opinion that the Republican demand for Acheson's ouster was timed badly. It was pointed out that lack of unified political support for Acheson in congress might embarrass him in relations with Atlantic pact foreign ministers.

RAIL TIE-UP:
Walkout Called Off

Under pressure from President Truman, the federal courts and their own union officials, more than 10,000 striking rail yard workers ended their crippling three-day strike that caused one of the greatest freight stackups in the nation's history.

The strike ended without any wage settlement, although representatives of the railroads and four rail unions got together for joint bargaining talks at the White House.

The strike had caused mountainous stacks of Christmas packages to be bottled up in post offices and stranded in freight cars. War shipments had been halted in transit. Some railroads had curtailed passenger train schedules.

The union had demanded a 40-hour week at pay they received for 48 hours—the same benefits which were awarded previously to one million nonoperating workers.

A presidential fact-finding board recommended a 40-hour week, but at pay boost of only 18 cents. The union's demands amounted to 31 cents.

Contest

The Pillsbury baking contest was held at the Waldorf Astoria with housewives from throughout the nation competing for thousands of dollars in prizes. Mrs. William E. Brebner of Des Moines, Iowa, (left) is showing the Duke and Duchess of Windsor a little thing she whipped up and called "The Thing," after the current whacky song.

CHURCHILL:
No Foolish Promises

Former Prime Minister Winston Churchill warned the western powers against the argument "that we must never use the atomic bomb until and unless it is used against us first."

"The argument is now put forward that we must never use the atomic bomb until and unless it is used against us first," Churchill said. "In other words, you must never fire until you are shot dead."

"Well, Sam, I'll tell you how it is. You see, I married a widow, and this widow had a daughter. Then my father, being a widower, married our daughter, so you see my father is my own son-in-law."

"Yes, I see."

A young skeptic in the congregation once interrupted Billy Sunday with the question:

"Who was Cain's wife?"

The Evangelist answered in all seriousness:

"I honor every seeker after knowledge of the truth. But I have a word of warning for this questioner. Don't risk losing salvation by too much inquiring after other men's wives."

The Accent

Nat Goodwin had an unenviable reputation among his fellow actors for—well, shall we call it extreme parsimony? One day he approached a table in the Lambs Club, New York, at which two other historians were seated, and remarked that he was thinking of writing his autobiography.

"With the accent on the 'buy'?" asked one of the actors meaningly.

"No," put in the other quickly, "with the accent on the 'ought to.'"

Using His Head

Mozart, who was a pupil of Haydn's, once made a bet with the master that he could compose a piece that Haydn could not play.

Within five minutes Mozart dashed off a script and handed it to Haydn.

"What's this?" he exclaimed after he had played a few bars. "Why here is a note to be played in the middle of the keyboard, when the hands are stretched out to both ends of the piano. Nobody can play such music."

Smilingly, Mozart took Haydn's place at the instrument and when he came to that note, he leaned forward and struck it with his nose—a member with which Mozart was amply supplied.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Mild soap and lukewarm water will do for imitation leather. To prevent cracking and peeling, follow the washing with a thin coat of petroleum jelly.

To stiffen organdy curtains, mix up a tub of very thin starch water and let the curtains soak for quite a while. Then hang them up and iron when they are dry.

Lots of house dresses, ready for discard, can easily be made over into aprons; so can cast-off playsuits, but more easily. Just take the skirt of a playsuit which you used to tie in front and reverse it. That is, tie it in back, and you'll have an apron in front of you.

If the stocking you want to discard is the same shade as some of the ones you're still using, unravel the threads in the useless hose and wind them on a spool. They'll be just right for mending the stockings you still have.

When there's nobody around to hold a hank of yarn while you wind it into a ball, drop the hank over a lamp shade that revolves easily and start winding.

Leather chairs can be cleaned by rubbing them with a soft cloth dipped in ordinary milk—or better still, in beaten egg white. When they're dry, go over them again with a clean soft cloth.

Ordinary starch will often put a whitish cast on black and dark-colored clothes, unless you do something about it. Put a small amount of leftover coffee—the brew, not the grounds—into the starch.

In starching flimsy curtains, ordinary methods won't always distribute the starch evenly throughout the fabric. Try this: have the starch solution boiling hot, dip the curtains in, and then put them through the wringer.

Tight Rope
By Allison L. Burks

Edward is disturbed by the fact that a casual acquaintance of Stella Moore, masquerading as Dorinda LaCroix, has recognized Stella on the street and may make trouble for himself and his cousin, Fay, his fiancee, who has employed Stella to pose as Dorinda to help keep Dorinda's grandmother alive. They are afraid that, if the truth of Dorinda's death in a lifeboat at sea after a ship was torpedoed were known, it might prove fatal to the aged woman. Stella reviews the events which led to her, an unemployed secretary, being employed to pose as the rich Dorinda LaCroix. Fay speculates on the wisdom of Stella's giving up the masquerade and leaving the Thorndyke house.

CHAPTER III

"It seemed to both of us," Fay explained, "that to learn of her granddaughter's death would kill Mrs. Thorndyke. She is so ill, it would need only this one thing more. We want you to take Dorinda's place until Mrs. Thorndyke has sufficiently recovered to be told the truth. It may be weeks, it may be months. We've taken this way to get in touch with the right kind of person."

"But I don't believe I could do it," Stella Moore had stammered.

"It isn't as difficult as it sounds," Fay assured her. "Mrs. Thorndyke hasn't seen Dorinda since she was a small girl. No one in the village has ever seen her. There are no recent photographs. We do no entertaining since Mrs. Thorndyke's illness. It will be quite simple really.

"You see now why the French requirement. After all, a girl brought up in France would be expected to be able to speak French. Probably you'll never need it but you might.

"And," she went on, an ironic note in her voice, "you need have no uneasiness. The Thorndykes are one of the oldest and most respected, as well as wealthiest families in Trentville. We can give you references which I am sure will satisfy you—only, of course, we want your promise not to let anyone know of this impersonation. We think it best to confine this knowledge to the three of us. We are not even letting Harriet Thorndyke, Mrs. Thorndyke's sister-in-law, and her daughter, Lana, who live with us, know. If too many people share the secret, the truth will inevitably come out. If we do this thing at all, we can't afford to have that happen until the proper time comes, as you can readily understand."

Stella Moore hesitated. She felt a reluctance, hard to explain, to go on with this. She had thought of playing a part for only a few hours daily. This would be a part for all day, every day. Could she do it?

But she had a broken wrist, she had no work, most of all, she needed the money. She would be foolish to pass up such a chance. Yes, she would try it.

'Grandmother' Captures Dorinda's Affections

Fay looked relieved at her acceptance. "I'm glad. I think if you'd decided against it, we'd have given the whole thing up. You're the only one I've felt would have any chance of playing Dorinda with conviction.

"Not that I blame you for hesitating," she added coolly. "I must own I don't like it myself. But what else can we do? Mr. Thorndyke is devoted to his mother. I am extremely fond of her myself.

"No, she is not my mother." She answered the unspoken question. "I'm a distant cousin of Edward's although I've made my home with the Thorndykes for a long time. Mr Thorndyke and I expect to be married whenever Mrs. Thorndyke's health permits."

So Dorinda came to Thorndyke House, a big old house furnished in the lush opulence of the nineties, with thick carpetings, heavy hangings of red velvet or gold brocade and massive furniture Here at her journey's end, Dorinda met the other three members of the Thorndyke family: Harriet and her daughter, Lana. And Grandmother

Harriet was middle aged, thin and spare. Her hair was a faded brown, her eyes watery and gray behind the pince nez precariously perched on her long narrow nose. She had been married, widowed, she had a daughter.

Lana was a doll-like girl in her early twenties, small and childishly pretty, with heavy, dark red hair worn rather long and turned under in a smooth roll about her shoulders, and round eyes which were sometimes blue, sometimes green. When she had come to know these two better, Dorinda could understand the rather cynical remark Fay had made on the drive from Los Angeles. "It won't be difficult keeping a secret from them. Harriet is absorbed in Lana; Lana is absorbed in herself.

She went down the dimly lit hall to Grandmother's room. As she lifted her hand to knock, she saw Harriet just rounding the head of the staircase. The older woman peered at her with nearsighted eyes.

"You're going in to see Lucy?" A dissasatisfied expression crossed her colorless face. "She seems to think a lot of you. Queer how she almost grieved herself to death before you came. You'd have thought Lana'd be a comfort to her—her own husband's niece. But no, it was Dorinda. Dorinda all the time. And she hadn't even seen you for years."

"Well, after all, her own daughter's child—" Dorinda began soothingly, and turned as Carol opened the door, her pretty dark face dimpling in welcome. "She's been waiting for you," she said and Dorinda crossed quickly to the bedside. She took Grandmother's frail little hands in hers, she bent and kissed Grandmother's cheek. It was like soft wrinkled velvet against her lips.

"Was I long in coming, darling?" she asked and sat down in the cushioned chair drawn up close to the bed.

She heard Cleve's voice.

"If you're going to be here a little while, Miss Dorinda, I've a few things to attend to," Carol excused herself. Her crisp white uniform rustled as she moved.

Mrs. Thorndyke's brown eyes followed her as she went out. "A pretty piece, isn't she? The best-looking nurse I ever had. You don't see really black hair like that very often. She took care of me when I was in the hospital last year, you know.

"I like good-looking people around me. You and Carol and Fay. No better looking women anywhere. I suppose some people would call that little hussy of Harriet's pretty but I don't. Fay's really the handsomest of the lot. But she's cold, Dorinda. Beauty needs warmth for perfection."

"Fay is lovely," Dorinda said honestly. "I think I have never seen anyone more beautiful."

Dorinda Finds Lana Slightly Distasteful

Dorinda went away when Carol came back. Grandmother was right about Carol. Black satin hair, black eyes, a rounded figure. She exuded vitality, possessed all the warmth which Fay seemed to lack.

Back in the living room again, Fay announced she had letters to write. Harriet and Lana went upstairs to inspect the purchases Lana had made in the village that day.

"How about a few games of cribbage with me, Dorinda?" Edward asked, and drew a card table up in front of the fire.

Outside the wind had risen, rain dashed against the windows. Now and then a gust of smoke down the chimney ebbed out into the room and was caught back again into the firebox as flames leaped high on the hearth. The quiet was broken only by the count, "Fifteen-two, Fifteen-four."

They played until nearly midnight. Greer came in a couple of times, mended the fire, emptied ash trays. Afterwards, Dorinda was to be very glad indeed that she and Edward had played; that they had been together; that Greer had seen them there.

She slept late the next morning. When she awoke the sun was pouring into the room and beyond the windows lay a clean washed world.

Edward and Fay still lingered at the table in the sunny breakfast room, smoking over the coffee cups. Edward smiled at her but Fay, lovely in a blue housecoat that matched the blue of her eyes, only murmured a cool good morning as she lit a cigarette.

"No dieting for you, Dorinda," Edward commented. "It's great to be young, eh, Fay?"

Fay shot him a glance full of venom. "I've never found it necessary to diet yet," she said coldly. She turned one shoulder toward him and spoke to Dorinda.

"Edward and I have been talking it over," she announced in a lowered tone. "We've decided that, since in any event you would be leaving very soon, we might as well make it right away, say tomorrow morning. If you take the morning train it will get you into Los Angeles in time to look for a place to live and get yourself settled to some extent before night. That will give you today to get packed. Perhaps you'd better do it yourself. We don't want the servants talking it over beforehand."

Dorinda broke in quickly. "It's all right with me, I'm ready to go at any time. The sooner the better." A shadow crossed her face. "Only what will I tell Grandmother?"

"You're to say nothing to her," Edward said hastily. "Don't give her any hint that you're leaving We'll make the explanations later."

"I hope she won't be hurt."

There was a murmur of voices in the hall. Then the door was pushed open and Lana, closely followed by her mother, came into the breakfast room. She wore a fussy breakfast coat of pale green. A matching satin ribbon tied back her red hair.

Her round face held an expression of pleased anticipation. "I'm starved," she declared, and slid into her chair across from Dorinda, her roving glance taking an inventory of every dish upon the table.

Dorinda watched Lana as she began her breakfast, then looked away. There was something distasteful to her about the other girl's dainty greediness. Lana seldom spoke at mealtimes but ate steadily and silently. Her small white hands plied her table utensils with expert correctness, but, without actually doing so, she gave the effect of smacking her lips over each palatable morsel she swallowed. Lana was the true hedonist, absorbed to the point of obsession in her clothes, her luxurious pastel-tinted room littered with lacy pillows and long-legged dolls, in anything which contributed to her own adornment or enjoyment.

"What's the matter, Dorinda?" Fay asked. "You're not eating. Perhaps in spite of what Edward says, you are toying with the idea of diet."

Harriet focused her vague eyes on Dorinda's face. "Diet?" she repeated. "Why, Dorinda's not too heavy. Of course, she's young yet and you never can tell—" Her glance shifted back to her daughter. "More coffee, darling?"

Cleve Promises Dorinda One of Trix's Puppies

"I imagine Dorinda has decided to cut down on her food." Fay's voice was pregnant with meaning, and Dorinda, her appetite gone, pushed back her plate.

"It's too nice a day to stay inside," she said lightly and left the breakfast room.

She went down the passage to a side entrance opening on to a smooth stretch of lawn.

A few hundred feet back of the house, there was an abrupt drop to a small beach. A flight of wooden steps led down to the white sand. Once down there you were alone, cut off from any view of the house, and, unless you stood at the very edge of the water, sheltered as well from the gaze of any loiterer farther down the beach by the curving wall of the high bank.

Dorinda stretched out like a cat in the sun. Her last day! She would leave all this — the beach, her lovely room, Grandmother, Cleve. These she regretted. Not the rest. She couldn't even say goodby. If Cleve were here now she couldn't tell him.

As if her thought had drawn him, she heard his voice. He came down the beach around the end of the curve. He wore slacks and sweater, his feet in canvas sneakers. A brown and white wire-haired dog followed at his heels.

"Hi, Dorinda. I had a hunch I'd find you here. Or if not here up at the house or somewhere else. At least I figured you'd have finished breakfast at"—he glanced down at the watch strapped about his wrist —"eleven o'clock."

"Clever deduction." Dorinda's brown eyes shone up at him. She'd never known anyone just like him. Tall, wide-shouldered, dark blue eyes under tumbled black hair, a long Irish upper lip, a cleft chin. Not handsome. Better than handsome.

"You know what, Rinda? After deep thought, I've decided to give you one of Trixie's puppies. Come over this afternoon and take the pick of the litter."

"Oh Cleve—not one of Trixie's pups!" She clapped her hands in delight. Then she remembered. She couldn't have a pup.

She swallowed a lump in her throat. "Oh, I'm sorry. I can't come today, Cleve."

Black Bear

Second most widely distributed big game is the black bear. Once native to all 48 states, it is still found in 34. Although its total in the 1947 census was only 131,000, with Maine and Washington states leading, it has steadily increased through the decade of the Fish and Wildlife service censuses.

Corn Yields Boosted 34 Bushels Per Acre By Better Soil Care

CROP yield profits are being boosted as much as $20 per acre through conservation farming methods, including contour cultivation, large amounts of fertilizer and the return of crop residues on Purdue University's Throckmorton farm, agronomists report.

Yields have risen steadily since 1942, according to the agronomists. The 1949 average net profit per acre was nearly twice that of the average seven years before.

Plowing Up Organic Matter Is Important in Building Up Soil.

In the tests, some fields have been farmed with common practices; others with a conservation system. Both groups have a four-year rotation of corn, soybeans, wheat and mixed legume-grass meadow. Fields receiving the common treatment are straight-row farmed. The conservation fields are farmed on the contour and receive larger amounts of fertilizer, plus crop residues.

Additional supplies of plant food, organic matter and moisture have teamed up to boost crop yields on the conservation fields, the agronomists say. As a result of these benefits, corn yields have averaged 106 bushels per acre on the conservation fields, compared with 72 bushels on the common fields in the 1942-49 period. Soybean yields have averaged 37 bushels per acre compared to 30; wheat, 34 bushels as against 27; and hay yields 2.2 tons per acre compared with 1.2 tons.

The tests are carried on cooperatively by the Research Branch of the U. S. Soil Conservation Service and the Purdue Agricultural Experiment Station.

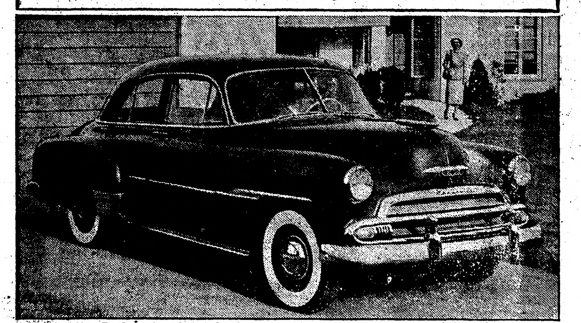
Fresh Chevrolet Styling Imparts Lower Lines



The Styleline De Luxe four-door sedan is one of 14 models introduced by Chevrolet as its passenger car line for 1951. Notable in this picture are the design improvements which accentuate a longer, lower appearance. Radiator grilles have been simplified, the decorative body moulding lowered and rear fender crowns raised. Models also offer added safety.

When One Is Drowning

The belief that a drowning person rises to the surface three times before dying is very widely held. Even Shakespeare apparently accepted it (Twelfth Night, I., v., 130). Accounts of witnesses, however, reveal the fact that some people, when drowning, have risen to the surface many times before finally disappearing while other persons have drowned by one submersion, and never came to the surface at all. No rule can be made regarding the number of times a body may or may not come to the surface.

Voting, From Latin Word

Voting from the Latin word "votum," which meant a solemn promise is older than history. The earliest method of voting was by "clamoring." The people let their will be known by shouting "yea" or "nay" or by clashing their spears on shields. This latter practice, known as suffragium (a responsive crash) in ancient Rome, is the origin of our word "suffrage." Later, in Greece, voting was done by a show of hands or by pebbles dropped in a ballot box.

The First Earring

According to a Mohammedan legend, the origin of earrings is thus stated: Sarah, being jealous of Hagar, declared she would not rest until her hands had been imbued in her bondmaid's blood. Then Abraham pierced Hagar's ear quickly, and drew a ring through it, so that Sarah was able to dip her hand in the blood of Hagar, without bringing the latter into danger. From that time it became a custom among women to wear earrings.

Bacon Designed Clothes

Francis Bacon, the celebrated essayist who some people think wrote Shakespeare's plays, spent his spare time devising new styles in men's clothes. He made 1,200 drawings of freakish raiment and had tailors make some of them up. When no friends of his would wear any of the wild and giddy costumes, he hired men to put them on and promenade the London streets.

Epidote

Epidote is a native orthosilicate of calcium, aluminum and iron. Occurring in granular masses in fibrous forms and as monoclinic crystals, the color may be red, white, black, or pistachio green. Fine epidote crystals used in jewelry are found in France, Switzerland, Austria, Norway and many parts of America.

Demosthenes' Orations

Some of Demosthenes' chief orations are the three "Philippics," three "Olynthiacs," "On the Peace," "On the Embassy," "On the Affairs of the Chersonese," and "On the Crown." The last is a defense of his career and by many is considered his masterpiece.

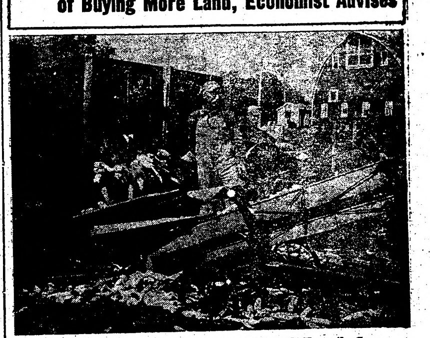
Build Soil's Crop Yielding Power Instead of Buying More Land, Economist Advises



High Corn Yields Per Acre Mean More Net Profit From the Crop.

BUILDING up your own land's crop yielding capacity is smarter business right now than buying additional acres, advises Frank Miller, University of Missouri farm economist.

Miller says land worth $40 an acre can be made into 100-bushel corn land by soil improvement methods. Such a plan may cost from $40 to $50 an acre, but land that will produce 100-bushel corn crops is worth $200 an acre or more.

Making your present acres produce more bushels involves several steps. To grow high yields, your soil needs a well balanced supply of plant nutrients. That means adding a complete fertilizer containing nitrogen, phosphate and potash. Testing your soil is a good idea. It will tell you what plant foods the soil needs and whether liming is required.

Building up the organic matter supply is equally important, so your crops will get more use out of the rains that fall and the fertilizer you use. Deep-rooted legumes and grasses grown regularly in the rotation are the best source of organic matter. In addition, the legume roots will loosen up tight soil, improve drainage and condition the land for corn and other crops. Legumes need plenty of phosphate and potash.

Co. Polio Fund In Poor Shape Financially

County Owes $1600.00 In Polio Bills Reports H. F. Hedquist, Chairman

Minnesota Chapters of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis are in debt more than a quarter of a million dollars to state hospitals for polio patent care during 1950.

H. F. Hedquist, chairman of the Marshall County Chapter of the National Foundation, said these bills remain to be paid on a million dollar patient care program in Minnesota during 1950.

"Amost half this debt is for hospitalization of patients at the Kenny Institute in Minneapolis. Minnesota polio patients have run up bills of more than $800,000 at the Kenny Institute in 1950, for which March of Dimes funds must pay," said H. F. Hedquist.

Other large unpaid polio bills remain at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, University Hospital in Minneapolis and Swedish hospital in Minneapolis

We must raise enough money in 1951 March of Dimes drive to pay these bills and prepare us for what may come in the months ahead", said H. F. Hedquist. The Marshall County Chapter has $1600 in unpaid 1950 polio bills at hospitals, Clinics and Institutes, according to H. F. Hedquist.

"I have every confidence that Marshall County residents will carry their share of the load by joining wholeheartedly in the 1951 March of Dimes Campaign," he said.

G. B. Nordrum of Bismarck, N. D., superintendent of public instruction ,has resigned to take a job in South America.

He will be succeeded by M. F. Peterson, deputy superintendent.

Nordrum left Bismarck last Tuesday for Santiago, Chile and an assignment with the institute of inter-American affairs in education.

His mission to Santiago, he was informed, will be to attend a conference of Washington officials and chiefs of a field party for orientation on policies and procedure. He is to assist in negotiations for a co-operative program requested by the government of Chile.

After the Santiago conference Nordum is to visit the institute's co-operative educational programs in Peru, Ecuador and Panama. Then he is to be assigned chief of a field party in one of the co-operative educational programs in South America.

While Nordrum will be employed by the education division of the institute of inter-American affairs he also will be responsible to a state department diplomatic mission.

New Year's Prayer

Father in Heaven, we do not ask that things may go our way in this new year, but that we may go Thy Way. We do not ask to be free of troubles and sorrows, but we ask for strength to meet them. We do not ask for temporal gifts but for the power to break loose from their insidious hold on our lives. We ask for that true peace of the heart which Thy Son gives, that peace which nothing can take away, not even the nightmarish fears of life in this year of 1951. Amen.

DEATH CLAIMS MRS. H. SEVERTS ON SATURDAY

Funeral Services For Pioneer Resident Will Be Held in Middle River on Thursday

Death has claimed another of the pioneer reisdents of our community.

Mrs. Henry Severts passed away Saturday morning, January 6th, 1951 at 12:15 at the Mercy Hospital in Thief River Falls. She was hospitalized on January 3rd after having been taken very ill.

Funeral services will be held on Thursday afternoon, January 11 at 2 p.m. at the First Lutheran Church in Middle River with Rev. C. O. Hanson officiating. Interment will be in the Riverside cemetery in Cedar township.

Funeral arrangements are being made by the Collins Funeral Homes of Middle River.

Serving as pallbearers will be George Olson, Nobel Olson, Edgar Olson, Adolph Klenk, Floyd Tanner and Arthur Peterson.

Annie Mathilda Fasteson was born in Wisconsin on September 14, 1883 and at the age of five years came to Marshall county with her parents. She was baptized and confirmed in the Lutheran Faith, and on March 27th, 1902 was united in marriage to Henry Severts at Thief Lake.

They made their home in this community all their married life and at the time of her death they were farming in Cedar township. At the time of her death she was 67 years, 3 months and 23 days old.

Left to mourn her passing are her husband; five daughters: Ida (Mrs. Frank Ogle) of Washington, D. C.; Elma (Mrs. George Engen) of Gatzke; Mary (Mrs. W. C. Walton) of Middle River; Eunice (Mrs. Selmer Larson) of Middle River; and Mabel (Mrs. John Sorter) of Middle River; three sons: Selmer, Herman and George Severts, all of Middle River.

She is also survived by four brothers, one sister and 17 grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her parents, three brothers and one sister.

New Pastor Given Welcoming Party

A welcoming party was held at the Emmanuel Lutheran Church at Ringbo on Sunday for their new pastor, Rev. and Mrs. Reinhart Peterson and Virginia Mae. Rev. and Mrs. Peterson, who live at Greenbush, arrived recently from Solway, Minnesota. Churches served by the new pastor are: Greenbush Lutheran Church, Bethania Lutheran, Badger Creek Lutheran, Oiland Lutheran (near Strandquist).

The pastor and family already are well-known here, having served the Parish thirteen years ago.

Lunch was served and a cash purse presented to the honored guests.

The Holt Independents were swamped by the Newfolden Nordics in a basketball game played on the local floor on January 2nd. The neighboring team drew the short end of a 65 to 24 score.

Some of the high school stars proved they have a "lot on the ball" by running up a big score. George Fricker, Jr. (who is attending the U) led his former teammates by tallying 17 counts. Reynard and Erling Huglen were close behind with 15 points each and Orlan Bjornrud had ten points. Donald Tweet accounted for the other eight points of the 65 tallies.

Russell was high point man for Holt with eight points.

Medical School

An A average in premedical college work is not required for admission to medical schools, Dr. Donald G. Anderson of Chicago, secretary of the American Medical association's council on medical education and hospitals, says. According to a recent report to the council, 10 per cent of students admitted to medical schools in the United States during the academic year 1949-1950 had no better than a C-plus scholastic average in premedical college work. Many others, Dr. Anderson pointed out, had B averages.

Queen Zenobia

"Fetters of gold" fit for a queen were the lot of Zenobia, the great ruler of Palmyra, when she was taken captive by the Roman emperor, Aurelian. Instead of ordering her to die, as he might have done, Aurelian ordered that a beautiful villa be prepared for her at Tivoli, where she spent the rest of her days.

Black Becomes White

Titanium oxide, the brilliant white pigment that is used extensively in paints is obtained chiefly from ilmenite, a black mineral containing approximately 47 per cent iron and 53 per cent titanium dioxide. While deposits are found in various parts of the United States, the chief commercial sources of supply are Travancore Beach, India, and Norway.

Bleaching Nylon

Strong bleaches will weaken nylon, as they do other fibers. These bleaches should be used carefully, and only when stains cannot be removed by washing or cleaning. Bleaches may be used in the same strength as for cottons. Instructions for use of the bleach should be followed.

Sunken Treasure

The coastal waters of the United States hold plenty of hard cash. One famous trove of four millions went down with a British frigate in New York's East River in 1780. Eighteen years later a Dutch warsloop with 15 millions sank off Lewes, Delaware. Only a few tantalizing coins have ever been recovered from either wreck.

First Railroad

The Granite railway of Massachusetts, was the first railroad in the United States. It was horse-operated, and was built in 1826. It ran from a quarry at Quincy down to tidewater, and is now part of the New Haven.

Laundry

Such laundry as towels, corduroy, bedspreads that don't need ironing when they're dried in the gas drier, shouldn't be left in the laundry basket to wrinkle. Fold them and put them away as soon as you take them out of the dryer.

Little Known

Selenium, a metal little known outside the industrial field, has a unique role in the manufacture of glass. It neutralizes the green color caused by iron impurities, and when added in sufficient quantities, turns the glass to a ruby color.

15 Shiploads in One

One of the largest and newest Great Lakes vessels can haul more than 18,000 tons of iron ore at one time. That amount is 15 times more than the capacity of the first ore ship designed for the trade in 1852.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Rejects Hoover Demand For a New U.S. Foreign Policy; Allies Approve Army of 750,000

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Here is another view of a section of the city corridor through which the first marines fought their way to the Hamhung beachhead. Weary leathernecks used every pause to catch a nap, even on the frozen ground. Over 11,000 of them were killed or wounded.

HOOVER:
A New Foreign Policy

Herbert Hoover demanded a new foreign policy for the United States in a major radio-television speech. He urged the U.S. to concentrate on holding the Atlantic and Pacific oceans with the island outposts of Britain, Japan, Formosa and the Philippines. He then warned against sending more men and money to Europe.

The former president's speech created a buzz of controversy in Washington. Democratic officials called it "rank isolationism" and even some top G.O.P. policy makers, including Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio, did not agree in all respects with Mr. Hoover.

This is how Mr. Hoover saw the situation:

"It is clear continental Europe has not in three years of our aid developed a unity of purpose and that will power necessary for its own defense.

"It is clear that our British friends are flirting with appeasement of Communist China.

"It is clear that the U.N. is in a fog of debate and indecision on whether to appease or not to appease."

He then went on to outline his seven "principles and action" for American policy:

1. Preserve "this western hemisphere Gibraltar."

2. Hold the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, seeking the cooperation of Great Britain.

3. Arm our air and naval forces "to the teeth," free Japan and help her rearm, and stiffen the defenses of Formosa and the Philippines.

4. Reduce other expenses, balance the budget, and roll back inflation.

5. Aid other nations that show "spirit and strength" in defending themselves against the Communists.

6. No appeasement anywhere, "no more Tehrans and Yaltas."

7. Watchful waiting in Europe pending its own development of "unity and will" to resist aggression.

Much of the criticism against Mr. Hoover's proposals centered around the belief that the Pacific and Atlantic oceans can be made a defense line. Some critics pointed out that failure to continue aid to our friends and allies would isolate us and eventually we would find ourselves without any friends in the world.

President Truman issued a statement shortly after Hoover's speech which amounted to a firm rejection of the former president's demand that troops and money be withheld from Europe.

The President said the Atlantic pact nations had shown they "mean business" about setting up a common defense and asserted the protection of western Europe was vital to United States security.

"Let there be no mistake," Truman said. "The unity of the nations of western Europe and the North Atlantic area is vital to their security and ours."

He then announced that soldiers of pact nations — presumably including U. S. troops—will be training together "within the next few weeks."

EUROPE:
Army of 750,000

The 12 Atlantic pact nations pledged themselves to try to match America's partial war mobilization. They pledged themselves to build an unprecedented international peacetime army of 750,000 men to stop Communist aggression. This is the army that General Eisenhower will command.

The council concluded its two day conference in Brussels with the issuance of a formal communique which included:

1. Establishment of an integrated force under centralized control and command. This force to be composed of contingents contributed by the participating governments.

2. An order to United States, Great Britain and France to start negotiations with the Germans to persuade them to agree to cooperate with the west in limited rearmament.

3. Creation of a new defense production board "charged with expanding and accelerating" rearmament; it will supersede the Atlantic powers old military production and supply board.

It will be many months however before General Eisenhower will have anything more than a token force. But observers agreed that at last the western powers have gotten down to the serious business of building a defense against communism.

CHRISTMAS:
A False Gaiety

The world—that part which still celebrates the Birth of Christ—went all-out for Christmas 1950, but it was a false gaiety. Those parts of the world where there was no strife could not forget that men still died believing in the dignity of man and the principle of freedom.

But people tried to make it a merry Christmas in many lands. In the United States department stores recorded near record sales.

Frenchmen, even while many of them feared it might be the last Christmas before World War III, sent sales records to new heights in the stores, buying for feasting and giving which would hide from their children the frayed nerves of their elders.

Britain, too, was determined to put the best face on matters and enjoy the holiday.

Brussels set the tone for Belgium. The city was gaily festooned for the holiday, the mood of worry successfully hidden and the celebration testifying to Belgium's renewed economic strength.

West Germany tried to forget that she was the object of a tug of war between Communism and non-Communism. Christmas sales hit a post-war peak.

In East Germany, there was no observance. There were no displays in the stores and no decorations anywhere except for a few forlorn wreaths here and there, hung up by the less timid householders.

That was the world on Christmas day—divided into two parts, one trying to be happy with a false gaiety, the other grim and foreboding.

CHINA:
Refuses to Negotiate

If the world held any hopes that the Chinese would talk peace in Korea, they were killed when China's Foreign Minister Chou En-lai said they would not negotiate with the nUited Nations Korean-truce team.

Chou then went on to name his price for peace in Korea.

1. Removal of the United States seventh fleet from Formosan waters.

2. Withdrawal of "foreign troops" from Korea.

3. A seat in the United Nations for Communist China.

Thus ended any hopes that the Chinese Communists would dicker with the three-man truce committee set up by the General Assembly to try to bring about a cease-fire in Korea. Peiping did not even bother to transmit a copy of its blast to Lake Success, seemingly content to let its radio demands remain the last word.

Meanwhile, a warning to China by Malcolm MacDonald, Britain's commissioner-general for southeast Asia, that they are heading for disaster caused a stir of comment throughout the east.

MacDonald said in part: ". . . . Should the Chinese government stay hostile to the western nations, oppose the Asian powers who strive for eastern and western co-operation, and defy the United Nations, then we could only adapt our attitude accordingly."

Observers were quick to point out that such a statement would not have been made unless previously approved by London. It would seem a blunt warning to Peiping that Britain is getting fed up. For this reason many observers believed it was the first indication of a get-tough policy by the British.

EISENHOWER:
Concerted Effort Needed

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme commander of the Atlantic pact armies, urged Americans to settle down to a concerted effort to meet the emergency confronting this country and stop partisan squabbling over the nation's leadership.

In his first formal press conference as supreme commander, he asked for "no more business as usual, no more profits as usual, no more working hours as usual."

Observers were interested in the general's view on including German troops in the new western Europan army. He said he wanted his former foes included but emphasized his belief that the Germans should make their military contributions only on a "voluntary basis" to be a really effective combat organization.

"In accepting anything like that," he said, "we must be sure we are getting strength and no weakness."

Of one thing Eisenhower was positive. The nation's strength is so great that its people can do "anything in the world they set out to do."

CASUALTIES:
The Price of War

The horrible price of war was brought home to the American people with the announcement that 11,964 United States troops were listed as dead, wounded and missing from the time the Chinese Communists attacked up to December 12.

With previous defense department figures, total American casualties for the war exceeded 42,000. The report said the Chinese Reds had suffered approximately 120,000 casualties during the same period.

The defense department's last previous total of casualties, whose next of kin had been notified, numbered 36,421. These included 5,518 killed, 25,587 wounded and 5,316 missing. Of the wounded 662 died later.

Heads Agency

Charles E. Wilson, former president of General Electric company, poses for cameramen as he took over his duties as head of the Defense Production Authority which has authority similar to the powers vested in the war production board in World War II.

RUSSIA:
Race of Sea Power

The Soviet Union has entered the race of sea power. Jane's Fighting Ships, the authoritative yearbook on the navies of the world, reported the Russians put into service last June a 35,000 to 37,000 ton battleship with towers for firing guided missiles.

Jane's also reported that 350 to 370 Russian submarines were believed already in service, with 120 more building.

CIVIL DEFENSE

House Votes Plan to Build Shelters

The house voted 247 to 1 a civil-defense plan that would cost an estimated $3,100,000. More than two thirds of the total amount would go for bomb shelters, with the federal government paying half of their cost and local and state governments putting up the rest.

The plan was sent to the senate and quick approval was expected. A somewhat similar program had been approved unanimously by the senate's armed-services committee.

One member of the congressional atomic committee, said it was estimated that first-rate civil defense measures, plus 12 minutes' advance warning of possible attack, might reduce casualties in an atomic attack by as much as 50 per cent. For this reason an adequate defense was imperative.

Hattie's Garden Crescents

These tangy dinner rolls have a straight-from-the-garden appeal. Here's something different to perk up that luncheon or dinner.

Bake at 400°F. for 12 to 15 minutes • Makes about 16 crescents

Dissolve 1 cake compressed yeast (or 1 package dry granular yeast) in ¼ cup lukewarm water. Combine ¼ cup shortening, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1½ teaspoons salt,* ½ cup boiling water. Stir until dissolved. Cool to lukewarm by adding ½ cup tomato juice. Blend in 1 tablespoon each: grated onion, celery, carrot; ½ teaspoon each: garlic salt, sage. Add dissolved yeast. Measure 3½ cups sifted Pillsbury's Best Enriched Flour*. Add 2 cups of the flour and beat thoroughly. Then add remainder of flour and mix well. Knead dough 5 to 7 minutes on floured board. Let rise in warm place (85° to 90° F.) until double in bulk, 45 to 60 minutes. Divide dough into two parts. Roll each on lightly floured board to circular shape about ¼ inch thick. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese. Cut each round into 8 wedges. If desired, 1 drop tabasco sauce may be added to each wedge. Roll each wedge, starting with wide end and rolling to point. Place on greased baking sheet, point-side down, and curve ends to form crescent shape. Let rise in warm place until light, about 45 to 60 minutes. Bake in moderately hot oven (400° F.) 12 to 15 minutes.

*If you use Pillsbury's Best Enriched Self-Rising Flour, omit salt.

Effective Cough Syrup, Home-Mixed for Extra Economy

Saves Big Dollars. No Cooking.

This splendid recipe is used by millions because it makes such an effective medicine for coughs due to colds. It's so easy to mix—a child could do it.

From any druggist get 2½ ounces of Pinex, a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its soothing effect on throat and bronchial irritations.

Then make a syrup with two cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Put the Pinex into a pint bottle and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of cough medicine, very effective and quick-acting, and you get about four times as much for your money. It never spoils, and children love its pleasant taste.

This cough syrup takes hold of coughs, giving quick relief. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, helps clear air passages. Money refunded if Pinex doesn't please.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Stella Moore, as Dorinda LaCroix, has developed a real affection for Grandmother Thorndyke, whom she is deceiving by posing as her granddaughter who died in a lifeboat at sea after the ship in which she was fleeing Paris and the Nazis with her Uncle Edward Thorndyke was torpedoed. Edward and his financee, his cousin, the beautiful Fay Thorndyke, had set up the masquerade because they feel—they made the spurious Dorinda believe—that it would be fatal to tell Grandmother Thorndyke of Dorinda's death. Dorinda finds Lana, daughter of Edward's Aunt Harriet, distasteful. A romance begins to develop between Dorinda and Cleve Adams, a neighbor.

CHAPTER IV

"Why not? You know where I live, don't you? One mile straight down the beach with only one house between—the stately mansion of the fabulously rich Van Sillars. By the way, Van Sillar himself is in residence again. I saw him sunbathing as I passed by. A beautiful hunk of man, my child. Mind you don't linger as you pass his gate. The current news is that he's getting a divorce from—what is it, his fourth or fifth wife? The wives generally do the divorcing, so I'm told, but this time it seems he's the plaintiff for a change. For why, I wouldn't know. How do you like that sewing—society gossip, little one?"

"Well, I don't know Van Sillar or want to for that matter, and it doesn't alter the fact that I can't come this afternoon."

"Don't look so sad about it. The pups'll keep until tomorrow."

But he looked a little puzzled as if some hint of her perturbation had touched him.

"Cleve," she said, "I want you to know I've had a wonderful time this spring." She thought, "When I've been with you," but did not say it. "In some ways it's been the most wonderful time I ever had. We've had fun together, you and I and Trixie."

"You're a funny kid, Dorinda." Cleve's tone was serious now. "Sometimes I feel as if we'd been brought up together. Sometimes I don't know you at all. Maybe it's just that you've spent most of your life in another country. Perhaps it's just that you've been through so much in this last year. I can't tell." He sounded dissatisfied as if he could not accept his own reasoning. "Anyway, you're a swell girl and I like you a lot. You know that or you're not as smart as I think you are."

He laid one brown hand over hers. "Maybe this will sound foolish but I'm saying it anyway. If you're ever in a jam or need help, I'll be standing by."

He broke off with a chuckle. "Willing and ready, that's me. Fees reasonable. Terms strictly cash. What's the matter with us, Dorinda? We're playing heavy tragedy. You're not saying good-by forever, are you? 'Leave me, Lord Cleveland, I love you but cruel fate demands I wed another!' That sort of thing."

Hawley Reports Death Of Salesman, Taylor

Dorinda laughed. "Maybe I'm trying to be mysterious. Mystery in a woman is supposed to be fascinating, isn't it?"

"You're not the type, my child. If you're going in for mystery you want to dye your hair black and wear something long and slinky. You aren't a Nazi spy, are you, honey?"

"Certainly I am, but don't tell the neighbors. Maybe we'd better go up to the house, Cleve. Uncle Edward will wonder where I've gone."

They climbed up the wooden steps, followed the graveled driveway past the kitchen garden and the golden privet hedge that divided it from the clipped grass lawns, to the front of the house.

"There's your uncle. I'll bet he's never even missed you."

Across the green turf they could see Edward Thorndyke. He stood on the small portico leaning against one of the white columns, and appeared to be talking earnestly to a man who stood on one of the steps below.

As Dorinda came in sight, Edward raised his voice and called to her. "Dorinda, we've been waiting for you." And as she came up to the steps, "This is Mr. Hawley from the sheriff's office."

Edward's black eyes were on her face. They were trying to tell her something, trying to warn her. But his voice did not break from its customary smoothness as he went on. "You remember telling me about the man who accosted you in McGregor's store yesterday? Well, it seems he—a salesman, wasn't he?—was killed in an automobile accident last night. There are, Mr. Hawley tells me, some rather peculiar angles about the affair and the police are making inquiries trying to find someone who knew him."

Fred Hawley was tall and young and lean. He had red hair and a fair, sensitive skin which flushed easily as it flushed now when Edward said, "This is my niece. Dorinda LaCroix. You already know Cleve Adams, I presume."

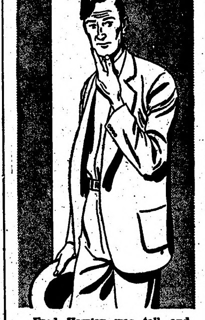
Cleve laughed. "Fred and I went to school together. Ever since Fred's been deputy sheriff, he's been trying to get something on me that'll justify him locking me up in the local Bastille."

Hawley did not smile and his gray eyes, fixed on Dorinda's face were serious. "I've seen you around town, Miss LaCroix. I'm sorry our first meeting has to be like this—on business, you might say."

"I can't imagine what business you could have with my niece." Edward's voice was carefully controlled but Dorinda could sense the impatience behind his calmness.

"Well, Miss LaCroix, it's like this. You see—" Hawley stopped, moistening his lips One could almost see his struggle to marshal words into proper sequence. "This is what I wanted to ask you. Were you at the Silver Slipper in Westport last night?"

Whatever she had expected him to ask, it had not been this. She stared at him in astonishment. "The Silver Slipper? I don't even know what it is. I never heard of it."



Fred Hawley was tall and young and lean.

"This Taylor—he was a salesman from Los Angeles. Early this morning his car ran off the beach road a couple of miles this side of Westport and smashed up on the rocks below. You know how the road from Westport runs along the cliff until it turns inland the last half mile to Trentville. Another motorist found him at daylight this morning. It's pretty dark along there and last night the road was wet and slippery and at first we thought it was just an ordinary accident. But there were some queer things about it.

"In the first place, there hadn't been any traffic to speak of late last night and we could trace Taylor's tire marks back along the road for a couple of hundred feet. They sort of weaved from one side of the road to the other as if he might have been drunk and of course that's the first thing we thought of, although we couldn't smell any liquor on him and he didn't have any in the car.

Dorinda Must Account For Meeting Taylor

"And we found out later in the morning that there couldn't have been any mechanical difficulty His car turned clear over and lit on the top when it fell. The top was smashed in but there wasn't a thing wrong with the steering gear or lights. We had a mechanic from the garage look it over

"Taylor was thrown out. His wrist watch was broken and stopped at twenty minutes to one. Dr Hanlon said that seemed about right. He'd been dead around six hours when we found him."

Hawley's eyes swept their intent faces, He was more at ease now, absorbed in his own story.

"We figured he was coming from Westport. And the first place we inquired, we hit the jackpot The Silver Slipper. We weren't so lucky as it sounds maybe because that's the only place anywhere around where you can get liquor late at night.

"Well, Taylor had been there. He'd come in a little before twelve. The bartender, Steve, remembered him. It was a quiet night, what with the rain, and Taylor stopped at the bar and asked Steve if his watch was right.

"About that time a girl came in and went into the back booth and Taylor said, 'There she is now,' and went after her. They stayed for about half an hour. Taylor had a couple of beers and the girl had a gin fiz. That was all. A few minutes before twelve-thirty, the girl got up and left and then Taylor came up to the bar and told Steve good night. He definitely wasn't drunk and Steve said he was grinning all over his face and seemed mighty pleased about something. He went out at twelve-thirty. You understand, the bartender was keeping his eye on the clock as it was getting along toward closing time.

"Now it's a queer thing, but neither Steve nor Tony, the waiter, saw the girl's face. She had on a big black hat and Tony said she sort of bent her head down when he waited on them. He was pretty sure though that it wasn't any girl he knew and he knows most of the girls, by sight anyway, around Westport and Trentville, too.

"But he could see that she was slim and under medium height and that she had yellow hair that came down around her shoulders. And then we saw McGregor when we checked back at the store and he told us about Taylor speaking to you. He said he had the impression Taylor followed you.

"So you can see why I had to ask you about the Silver Slipper, Miss LaCroix. This was Taylor's first trip here so he couldn't have been much acquainted in town. You know girls change their minds sometimes about talking to fellows and there aren't many blonde girls around this part of the country. I guess I could count 'em on one hand."

Dorinda was a little pale but her brown eyes did not waver. "It was just as Mr. McGregor said," she admitted. "Taylor spoke to me and he did follow me. But I don't suppose we exchanged a half dozen sentences altogether. I told him if he didn't stop annoying me, I would lodge a complaint against him with your office. I think he believed I meant what I said for he went off and that was the last I saw of him." She drew a long breath, feeling a sense of danger skirted.

"At any rate, I certainly wasn't at the Silver Slipper last night. Uncle Edward could have told you that. Why, we played cribbage until quite late—the clock in the hall was just striking twelve when I went upstairs. So you see it couldn't have been I."

Hawley smiled for the first time. "I sort of hoped I'd find you were that girl when I came here. Now since I've met you, I'm sort of glad you're not. I won't bother you folks any more. You understand we've got to follow up everything we can."

"Oh, certainly," Edward's frown relaxed. "Naturally, I dislike anyone connecting Dorinda with a man of that character even in thought. But I understand you had no choice but to make inquiries. You'll find, I haven't the slightest doubt, that the man was too intoxicated to handle a car. Or it's possible he might have had a heart attack."

Fay Appears Piqued At Edward, Dorinda

"On the surface it seems there was no reason the accident should have happened. But I expect you're right. Dr. Hanlon's handling the autopsy this afternoon and he'll find out just how much of a load he was carrying. Or it could have been a heart attack, as you say." Hawley pulled his hat down on his sandy hair. "Thank you, Miss LaCroix. Sorry to have troubled you."

Edward was grumbling as Dorinda followed him into the hall. "This is an unfortunate thing to happen just now. We don't want any attention focused on you."

He laid his hand on her shoulder She could feel his touch, heavy and warm, through the brown sweater. "You're a sweet child. Dorinda."

Fay stood in the door of the living room, her cold blue eyes watching them. "I think you were more disturbed than Dorinda," she said dryly.

Edward whirled, startled. He was incredibly quick on his feet for so large a man. He took one step toward Fay "You heard?"

She bent her head. "I was just inside the open window I didn't see any object in joining you but naturally I wanted to know what had happened since I've let myself become involved in your affairs"

"Our affairs, Fay," Edward corrected softly.

Fay's icy face softened She leaned toward him, her lips curving. Then awareness caught her. She drew herself back

"I'm afraid we're boring Dorinda, she said crisply. "Don't tell me you've forgotten your little 'niece.' " Her tone was heavy with irony. "To get back to the matter in hand, I don't believe I'd let the situation bother me. It will all have blown over in a day or two. Hawley is satisfied. He won't be back."

"Perhaps you're right. But I don't like it."

"Why not? It has nothing to do with us. At least Taylor won't be prowling around trying to find out what Dorinda is doing here."

"Better Taylor than the sheriff. There might have been ways of keeping Taylor quiet."

"LAND O' LAKES built a better MARKET FOR FARMERS!"

says EARL O. KOMPELIEN, Operator, Producers Cooperative Creamery, Marshall, Minnesota

"Believe me, LAND O'LAKES has helped all of us by building a better market for our products," says Mr. Kompelien. "When LAND O'LAKES takes over the marketing, there's a whole lot fairer margin for owner-patrons. Without LAND O'LAKES we wouldn't be getting the return we are today.

"And another thing—with LAND O'LAKES taking care of the marketing problems, we're able to concentrate on what we know best. And that's making better quality products that get top prices.

"Yes, we're a hundred per cent for our tie-up with LAND O'LAKES. We know we will always get a fair deal because LAND O'LAKES is the farmers' own organization."

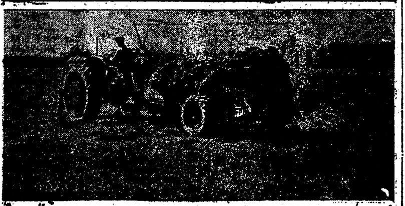
Adding Superphosphate Helps Manure Make Better Top-dressing for Wheat and Legumes



One Load of Manure Does the Work of Two When Superphosphate Is Added.

BARNYARD manure can be put to good use in top-dressing winter wheat. Ohio agronomists recommend a winter top-dressing of 4 to 5 spreader loads per acre.

Manure top-dressings will also help new legume seedings which go into the winter with weak and short top growth. The manure serves as a mulch which cuts down winterkilling and heaving losses. Besides the mulching benefits, the manure's plant nutrients boost hay yields.

Prof. C. J. Chapman, University of Wisconsin extension agronomist, says that one load of manure can be made to do the work of two if superphosphate is added to the manure. He points out that manure contains about twice as much nitrogen and potash as it does phosphate. This nitrogen, largely in liquid form, evaporates rapidly in the form of ammonia. Chapman says that adding superphosphate helps prevent nitrogen loss by locking it up in nonvolatile form and stopping its evaporation.

Chapman says superphosphate can be spread in barn gutters at the rate of a pound per cow per day, or the superphosphate can be added when the manure goes out to the field.

Decisions

Men and nations gain or lose by the quality of decisions they make. Founders of this remarkable republic made a wise decision long ago, in favor of personal self-reliance and individual government. America is great today because so many smart people were left free to do as much as they could, as well as they knew how, and gain as much of a reward for themselves as they were able.

Not all Americans are models of progress and success but they all have benefited more or less from the achievements of those who did have the immortal spark. You can't pick successful men before they try, but more men of outstanding talent are sure to come to light where everyone is allowed to do his best. A large number of thinkers at work always adds up to more for everybody.

Not Luck at All

People may orate about America's greatness coming from her vast natural resources. The resources exist all right but the redskins had them before Columbus came and didn't know the use of a wheel. Some people boast of this nation's blue-blood heritage. It was good. Our forebears, in large part, came from Europe. That was probably the smartest thing most of them ever did.

America's economic system is what made America great. It is a system of liberty giving every man the right to pick what he wants and go after it hammer-and-tongs, get it if he can and enjoy it to the extent of his capacity, so long as it does not trespass the rights of somebody else. It is a sprightly and dynamic economy, quickly adjustable to changing times and conditions.

What Developed?

Limitless opportunity and keen competition have borne a rich harvest. Our farmers live better than the peerage of some foreign lands. Our laborers have more than workers elsewhere ever have had at any time. America has 7% of the world's population and 80% of the world's automobiles. We send more children to high school and college than all the rest of the world combined.

During the last two years of World War II, from a startled start in December, 1941, America made more war materials than all her allies and her foes put together. An American carpenter can buy more with his pay for a day's work than any other carpenter anywhere—2½ times as much as the carpenter in Germany or France. And the same goes in all trades; the butcher, the baker and the street-car conductor.

How It Works

Freedom of opportunity fires everybody to try; thus men of great genius come to light and the whole nation benefits. Then competition between men of special ability stimulates them to zealous effort in turning out products of excellence at fair prices to develop and hold profitable markets. This enables America's middle class to enjoy luxuries unknown to run-of-mine kings.

Mass production for volume sales demands fine and expensive tools. Buying this machinery calls for capital investment — averaging $6,000 per industrial job in the United States. The thing that made America great was a decision to be free: Free to work, free to think, free to earn, free to save and free to invest and make a profit. It is called Free Enterprise and it's too valuable to lose.

Room One is decorated with pictures of winter. We all made snowmen. We have a surprise Corner where we find something new every day. Creryl, Howard, Kathy and Jeanie had 100 in Spelling last week. Several of us have new skates and we can skate quite well now.

"Eat a Better Breakfast" is the slogan the 3rd and 4th graders are reminded of each morning. We have a Better Breakfast club. Each morning we check on individual booklets what we ate for breakfast. At the end of the week our points are added and totaled with our teams score. The winning teams will receive Early Bird Breakfast Club pins. This has already shown results as on Tuesday morning one little girl remarked, "Oof, I'm so full, but I ate every thing I was supposed to!"

The bulletin board in room 3 has the caption, "Early Days in America". The fifth graders have been studying about life in the English colonies and are now working on their bulletin board display. Ronald brought a miniature water wheel which was tried under the faucet to see it work.

The sixth graders have finished a unit on germs and how they cause disease. We have all become more germ concious and remember our daily health chores a little better.

Miss Ruth Beddie. N. W. Minnesota Girl Scout Director, of Thief River Falls, spoke to seveaal girls and Mrs. Peterson in the interest of organizing a Girl Scout Troop at Holt. Mrs. H. Burton, Mrs. Glenn Peterson Mrs. Orlin Ness and Mrs. John Reed were also present. Several girls have returned "Parents Consent to Membership in a Girl Scout Troop". At the first meeting they will learn "Tenderfoot" requirements. Three school subjects that are coorelated into Girl Scout work are Physical Education, Industrial Arts and Citizenship.

We are nearing the end of the first semester and third six-weeks period. Two in the upper grade room have spelled every word in each of the 18 final tests correctly during this semester. They are Marilyn Moe, grade 7 and Esther Haglund, grade 8.

NOTICE

Are we going to have week day church school? All parents who are interested in having their children attend such a school please meet at the school at 1:00 o'clock on Monday afternoon Jan. 22. There are several questions to be discussed before this school can be organized. Sunday school cannot be dropped Can we have both? Are you willing to buy work books? Who will teach? We can't expect the regular Sunday school teachers to teach both week day school and Sunday school. Unless enough parents are interested in meeting up with the parish board of education to discuss this matter there will be no week day school,

This We Have to See

Basketball fans of the area are in for some surprises and laughs on Thursday evening (tonite) at the Newfolden gymnasium when the Businessmen of Newfolden meet the challenge of "The Scattered Five". It will be one of those treats of a lifetime that young and old will want to see.

The coach for the businessmen's team will be Marv (Achin' Back) Smeby who says he has a lot of lame-backed businessmen line up for the game.

The gags and laughs are going to come fast and furious once the whistle is blown at 7:30!

* * * *

Banker George Fricker of Holt has been secured as referee for the "bout". Friends are advising him to come escorted by a body guard in case his decisions go against the teams.

* * * *

Players composing the businessmen's team will be Carl (Jumping) Roseland, Howard (Ag) Kinney, Floyd (Judge) Bakke, Ernest (tall and handsome) Nelson, and last but not least that dashing man—"Achin' Back".

* * * *

A movement is reported underway to get Olger Green, Pernel Anderson, Martin Smeby, Conrad Bjornrud and Halbert Amundson to play the last quarter of the exhibition game. (Editor's Note: These fellows should get together and agree on black "tights" for their uniform).

* * * *

Of course, Newfolden has a lot of other "players" who are going to be asked to appear on the floor that night. The supply of laughs should be unlimited.

Alton (Charming) Carlson of Holt and Percy and Harvey Stokke of Viking have been secured aleardy. These fellows will be decked out in appropriate uniforms— "out of this world", so to speak.

* * * *

Local fellows who are reported to be in shape for this game are Helmer Lind and Pete Tandberg from west of town. Lester Elseth will also be on hand to defend the good name of the "Scattered Five".

When the management of the Newfolden Independents approached one of these fellows, he claimed he had nothing more to wear than his "long johns"—and that he intended to appear in them! (wow).

The management of the games stated to this newspaper he will not attempt to influence the uniforms of the teams, but will accept what comes— penalty or no penalty.

You can expect almost anything at this game!

* * * *

The preilminary game will be played at 7:30 p.m. while the Newfolden Indees will be hosts to the strong Strandquist Quint following the preliminary. This is the first time Newfolden has played Strandquist this year and it should be a hard-fought game.

* * * *

The local Independents have a record of eleven straight wins and no defeats, with Strandquist running close to this standing in the Little Ten League.

Regular admissions will be charged for both games.

* * * *

For the best in basket ball be sure to attend— and bring the whole family.

Farmers Warned Against New Wheat

County Agent Forbes warned farmers today against buying three new strains of hard red spring wheat now being offered for sale in Minnesota and other northern states.

Strains 1756, 1831 and 1953 have not been released and are not recommended by either the Minnesota Experiment station or the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the county agent has been informed by Carl Borgeson, agronomy professor at the University of Minnesota.

These wheats, like all other present commercial wheat varieties, are not resistant to race 15B, a new and virulent race of wheat stem rust which caused extensive damage in 1950.

Farmers will make a serious mistake if they pay high prices for seeds of Strains 1756, 1831 and 1953, Borgeson warned.

The release and build-up of these three experimental strains has not been authorized. Seedsmen who have obtained and increased this seed have been requested to refrain from selling it.

Strains 1756 and 1831 have been tested extensively but not released. While both are good agronomically, their quality has been found to be unsatisfactory. Strain 1953 has not been tested long enough to determine its value. The decision on whether or not to release this strain will be decided jointly by the U. S. Department of Agriculture and cooperating state experiment stations only after further testing.

Ward Marshall, seed registrar at University Farm, points out that there is no advantage in buying these seeds, and he suggests waiting for general release of Lee, a new hard red spring wheat now being increased by the Minnesota station and approved growers. It is expected to be in plentiful supply after the 1951 season.

In the meantime, he recommends that Minnesota growers stay with Mida, Piolt and other recommended varieties of which there are good suppiles from reliable sources at moderate prices.

Back to School

Some Marshall county women will be going "back to school" January 30 to February 2 when the University of Minnesota holds it 49th annual Farm and Home Week at University Farm. Each year hundreds of Minnesota women get new ideas on how to do a better job of homemaking when they attend the University's Farm and Home Week program, says Home Agent Margaret Nelson.

Nettie Batten Passed Away

Funeral services were held from the Bethlehem Lutheran church, New Solum township, on Tuesday afternoon, January 16 for Miss Nettie Batten, long time resident of this community, who passed away at her home nine miles south of Newfolden on Saturday morning, January 13 at the age of 73 years, 4 month and 7 days. Rev. Thv. Myhrer officiated at the services. Pallbearers, all old friends and neighbors were, Melvin Ihle, Holterman Olson, Louis Roseland, Arthur Olson, Herbert Waldron and Toby Melvie. The remains were placed in a vault at Thief River Falls awaiting interment at a later date. Funeral arrangements were by the Lee Funeral Service.

Nettie Batten was born of John and Elizabeth Batten at Linden, Wisconsin on September 6, 1877. There she spent her girlhood, attended school and graduated from the Linden High School. Later she attended teacher's college at Mayville, North Dakota and Bemidji, Minnesota. As a young woman, she, with her brothers and sisters moved onto a farm 9 miles south of Newfolden, where she resided until her death. For many years she taught in the rural schools of Minnesota and North Dakota and also in the villages of Newfolden and Holt.

Miss Batten was a quiet person, who, between her teaching terms, chose to remain at the farm home with her brothers and sisters. She was a good neighbor who was well liked and respected by all who knew her. Although brought up in the Methodist faith, she was an active worker in the Luther League of the Bethlehem church in New Solum.

She is survived by three sisters, Mrs. Anna Walker, Kenmore, North Dakota, Lydia Batten, Thief River Falls and LaVon Batten, Newfolden and one brother Roscoe, also of Newfolden. She is also survived by a nephew, Paul Walker of Kenmore, North Dakota.

Relatives from out of town attending the funeral were Mrs. Anna Walker and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Walker of Kenmore, North Dakota.

Peace be to her memory.

Flouridation

A cut of almost two-thirds in the cost of putting flourine into drinking water in an effort to prevent tooth decay may result from a discovery of Dr. F. J. McClure, of the National Institute of Dental Research, U. S. Public Health Service. Another, cheaper flourine compound, sodium fluosilicate, may be just as effective as sodium fluoride, now being used. Sodium fluosilicate, which contains more fluorine, costs about four and one-half cents a pound, as compared with 10 cents a pound for sodium fluoride.

Reduce Losses of Foals

Some of the horses that are romping home ahead of the field today owe their victories—and their lives—to new scientific discoveries. According to veterinarians at the University of Kentucky, losses of unborn and new born foals due to infections have been reduced 20 percent in the bluegrass area of Kentucky within the past few years. Better means of diagnosing ailments of foals and improved disease-fighting drugs are cited as principal factors in the loss reduction.

Kentucky Rifle

The famed muzzle-loading Kentucky rifle, an unmatched weapon in early frontier days, is enjoying a well deserved comeback in popular esteem. Gun clubs and sports enthusiasts report renewed interest in the old rifle, which is again being used at target meets and in actual hunting. Marksmen interested in the sharpshooting traditions of their forebears are rediscovering the Kentucky's celebrated accuracy.

Sweet Peppers

Sweet peppers may be either green or red. They change from a deep green to a red color as they become more mature. The hot peppers, either green or red, are used mostly in pickles and relishes. There is one thing about eating peppers, they are rich in vitamin C, the vitamin you need every day, and they also have liberal amounts of vitamin A.

Easy to Stick

The newest way to affix notices to bulletin boards is through the use of magnets. About one-fourth the size of a cube of sugar, these new "tacks" are now sold with steel bulletin boards. Each magnet, which is made of a 25 per cent nickel alloy, is capable of holding 83 times its own weight.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Dorinda LaCroix (in reality Stella Moore, a secretary) is questioned concerning the death of a salesman who penetrated her masquerade in which she pretends to be Dorinda LaCroix at the behest of Edward Thorndyke, the real Dorinda's uncle. The purpose, Dorinda is told, is to protect the life of Grandmother Thorndyke for whom it might be fatal to learn that the real Dorinda is dead. The salesman is found dead in his wrecked car, but the sheriff's deputy, Fred Hawley, suspects foul play and a woman with hair like Dorinda's was seen with Taylor before the crash. Dorinda is required to account for her meeting with Taylor and her whereabouts at the time of the wreck.

CHAPTER V

"Well, he's quiet enough now," Fay laughed. "Don't look so shocked, Dorinda. Perhaps the man meant a little more to you than you've admitted."

Dorinda felt her face flush. "I hardly knew him. What little I knew I didn't like. But it isn't a joke for anyone to be killed."

"Of course not," Edward said quickly. "The thing is, we planned for Dorinda to go tomorrow. Under the circumstances—"

"But I've got to go," Dorinda interrupted, panic-stricken. For the moment she forgot Cleve, forgot Grandmother. All she wanted was to be gone, to leave forever this big house by the sea.

"You've got to?" Edward questioned. "Come, Dorinda, what can be so urgent about it?"

"Why argue with her?" Fay asked curtly. "Dorinda made an agreement. She'll stick to it." Her white teeth caught at her lower lip. "We were sending her away tomorrow—I'm sorry we didn't let her go before any of this trouble came up. But I see your point, Edward. It might look peculiar if she left so soon after this inquiry. I suppose"—reluctance was apparent in every syllable—"she'll have to wait a few days longer."

"I think it advisable." Edward sounded relieved. "I felt we were rushing matters along a little too fast anyway. Surely you won't mind a day or two more here, Dorinda?"

"I suppose not," she said dully. Fay was right. She had made a bargain. She must abide by it.

Upstairs in her room, Dorinda dropped down in a chintz-covered chair by the window. She sat, elbows on her knees, her head resting on her palms, her hair falling across her eyes, a swaying curtain of soft gold.

"A few more days," Edward had said. A few more days, a few more weeks. Perhaps she'd never get away. Taylor hadn't got away.

Dorinda Contemplates Giving up False Role

The long afternoon was over. The pale sunlight was suddenly gone and dusk was gathering, filling the corners with shadows, blotting out the last of the daylight. Dorinda, as she went down the stair, could hear Edward's voice from the closet that served as telephone booth at the rear of the hall; then a click as he replaced the receiver.

He came toward her as she neared the foot of the staircase. His glance slid past her unseeingly as he said, "Hawley just telephoned. The autopsy's finished. Dr. Hanlon found Taylor'd taken a stiff dose of sleeping medicine—sodium amytal—they think in that last drink he had. He was fighting sleep when he went over the bank."

"Then—then we needn't worry about it, need we?" she asked uncertainly.

"It wouldn't seem so. I think Hawley is satisfied.

"Perhaps, after this has blown over, we can make life a little more amusing for you, Dorinda. You can understand my mother's illness has forced us to live a quiet existence for the time and we have had to leave you to your own resources a great deal. But that won't last always. You really could have quite a gay, delightful life here after a while."

"After a while!" she echoed. Her voice rose in consternation. "But you said, you and Fay, that I could go away in a few days. You promised—"

"Don't speak so loudly." He looked about him uncomfortably. "How quick you are to seize on every word I say. Of course, you shall go away, if you like, just as soon as it's feasible. But don't you ever give a thought to what you'll be leaving behind? Wouldn't you like to stay here?"

"I've told you before. I couldn't be happy in such a false position. Why do you ask that? I don't understand you. Even if I wanted to stay here, Fay wouldn't allow it." For the first time, she was glad of Fay's dislike.

"I think I can control Fay," Edward told her complacently. He patted her shoulder. "We won't say any more about it just now. Shall we leave it at that? Some time you and I are going to have a long serious talk." Dorinda saw the sudden spark that lit in his black eyes. "Somewhere," he spoke between clenched teeth, "away from this dammed house."

He moved away. She saw his dark bulk silhouetted in the door of the living room for a moment before he went out of sight.

At the dinner table, Dorinda said tentatively, "Uncle Edward, I thought I would ask Carol to go with me to the pictures the next time she had an evening off. There's quite a good movie playing in town this week."

"Do you feel the need of friends, Dorinda?"

"Well, it's lonely sometimes. And I thought since Carol can't be much older than I am and we're right here in the house together—" She bit her lip, despising herself for her incoherence. She felt—and acted, she thought—like an idiot under Edward's intent stare.

"A sort of defensive alliance perhaps?" He shook his head in disapproval. "Do you really believe there could be a disinterested friendship between a girl who stands in the place of a daughter of the house and one of my employees?"

"I had hoped," he went on, "that you and Fay could be friends. Or perhaps Lana. Though I'm afraid Lana is rather like the cat who walked by herself. She doesn't seem to have much use for other girls." He smiled at Lana across the table. She grinned back at him briefly, without speaking, and went on with her dinner.

The knob turned and Harriet peered in at her.

"However—."

"But, surely, Dorinda, a nurse?" Harriet's pale eyes widened in wonder. "Really a sort of upper servant. What would people say?"

"—that seems impossible," Edward finished calmly, unheeding Harriet's interruption. "No, Dorinda, I don't think I can give my approval of such an idea. Of course I've no objection to a reasonable amity between you two girls but as to going out together or anything of the sort, I'm afraid I must forbid that."

His eyes were still fixed, unstirring, upon her face. "You will respect my wishes in this?"

She choked down her rebellion. "Of course." After all, Edward was still her employer.

She went back upstairs soon after dinner. Edward murmured something about cribbage as she left the living room but she pretended not to hear him. In her room, she put on her nightdress and blue robe. She'd read in bed for a while, something exciting that would distract her mind.

Harriet's Only Thought Is Always for Lana

As she picked up the book she had brought upstairs with her, a light tap sounded on the door, the knob turned and Harriet peered in at her.

"Oh, are you going to bed so soon? It's only a little after nine o'clock. I've been thinking—I'd like to talk to you for a little if you wouldn't mind."

But seated in a comfortable chair, her busy fingers idle for once, she seemed in no hurry to explain her visit.

"I'm a little worried about Lana, Dorinda. She's beautiful and she's full of life and just at the age where she should be having a wonderful time. Of course, I know that with your grandmother ill, there couldn't be much social life going on here. But Lucy is a lot better now. Surely small parties and guests now and then wouldn't disturb her. They tell me when she was well this was quite a gay house. The Thorndykes know people—the best people, I mean—all over the state." She paused, rubbing at one of the red marks beside her nose with a bony forefinger.

"You have lots of influence with Lucy. She evidently thinks a lot more of you than she does of Lana. Of course, as you say, it must be because you're her own daughter's child. I thought if you could sort of hint to her maybe that it was dull for you here—" She looked at Dorinda expectantly.

Dorinda hesitated. "I wouldn't like to do that, Aunt Harriet. Besides, I've only been here such a short time. If you could talk to her yourself—this has been your home for so much longer—"

"A year and a half," said Harriet. "But she started having those heart attacks soon after we came, so it's been a dull house for Lana. Of course, we only came on a visit—but . . . My husband wasn't as successful as his older brother, you know. Lewis didn't leave me a big house and a fortune, as her husband did. I could get along. I wouldn't mind for myself. But I couldn't keep up a house and give Lana the things she needs, too.

"Lana's sensitive, Dorinda. She has to have lovely clothes and nice surroundings. Just getting along and having to manage—it would about kill her. I never had much when I was young—just a pretty face although you wouldn't think it to look at me now—and I guess Lucy and her husband thought Lewis took a step down when he married me; although they were always nice enough to me. But that doesn't matter now. I'm thinking about Lana."

"I'm sorry, Aunt Harriet. I know how much Lana means to you. But I'm sure it won't always be like this. Grandmother is better and perhaps in a few months—why don't you have a talk with Uncle Edward?"

Harriet dabbed at her eyes with her handkerchief. "I couldn't say anything to Edward. I'm in a humiliating position here, Dorinda. I don't want to remind him or Lucy that this isn't really my home. But I thought you—there's something kind about you even if you are only a girl—if you could talk to one of them—"

Cleve Keeps Promise, Brings Pup to Dorinda

She turned a tearful gaze on Dorinda. "I tell you, I'm worried about Lana!" she said with a fierceness of which Dorinda would not have believed her capable. "She used to tell me everything, she didn't have a thought I didn't know. But now she goes away, she doesn't tell me where she's going or when she's coming back. I don't know what she's thinking any more. And if I ask her questions, it only makes her cross."

She put her hand across her twitching lips, and added, with a visible effort at self control, "Of course, I know Lana's a good girl. I wouldn't want you to think she wasn't. It's just that I want her to be in the position she should be. I guess you don't care about that much for yourself. You've got Cleve Adams. He comes from a good family but he isn't just what I'd want for Lana. The Adamses haven't any real money, just the house and about enough to run it. Cleve hasn't anything himself."

"Cleve can earn enough. Money doesn't mean as much to me as it does to you, Aunt Harriet."

"You're a queer girl. Maybe, after you're married—"

"Married! Good Heavens, Aunt Harriet, I've no intention of marrying Cleve Adams." Dorinda stood up. "I'll put in a word for you if I can. And don't worry. I'm sure everything will come out all right."

It would, too, she thought grimly, so far as Lana was concerned. She had complete confidence in Lana's ability to land always on her own feet.

She hurried over her breakfast. Breakfast in bed was not a luxury which appealed to her this morning. She dressed quickly, feeling her spirits rise in spite of herself. Sunshine and a good night's sleep were cures for any mental upsets, she decided.

She went from the dim cool hall out to the white portico and blazing sunlight. The clatter of a lawnmower somewhere around the corner of the house played obligato to the song of the mockingbird high in a giant eucalyptus. Gravel grated under the wheels of the blue coupe that whirled around the curve of the driveway and came to a halt in front of the red brick steps.

Cleve grinned at her from behind the wheel. "I'm not a Greek but I come bearing gifts," he announced. He lifted something from the seat beside him before he jumped out. "How's this for a token of love from me to you?" He deposited a squirming bundle in her arms.

"Oh, Cleve!" Dorinda screamed. She hugged the brown and white puppy close to her, bending her head to let the rose-pink tongue kiss her cheek.

"Is that all you can say? 'Oh, Cleve!' Here I bring you the flower of my flock—Hey, don't let him wash your face. If he gets a mouthful of paint, it'll probably poison him."

AROUND THE HOUSE

To use leftover bread, cut the bread in cubes, fry in garlic flavored bacon fat and toss with greens. The cubes enhance the flavor of the salad and add valuable nutrients.

• • •

In case of fruit stains, rinse the spots with cold water as soon as the meal is over. Hot water used first has a tendency to "set" the stain.

No sewing basket should be without a small magnet. Nothing like it for picking up stray pins and needles without getting pricked.

• • •

Attach an old powder puff to your wrist with a rubber band and use it as a handy pin and needle cushion while you're doing any sewing or fitting.

• • •

There are safe ways to keep your hands from freezing, though, when you have to hang clothes outdoors on a cold day. One of the best things is to rub your hands well with vinegar before you go out.

• • •

A popular method of preventing wet clothes from freezing on the line in wintertime is to put salt in the rinse water. It'll work, all right, but it's not good practice because salt water—if it's not rinsed out—is harmful to many washable fabrics.

• • •

Empty pencil-lead boxes make handy containers for keeping pins and needles in your sewing basket.

• • •

To sharpen a pair of sewing scissors (or any scissors, in fact), just use them to cut a piece of sandpaper into little bits.

• • •

If you want to stretch a newly washed curtain, and you have no curtain stretcher, pin a large clean bedsheet to the living-room rug before retiring at night; and pin the curtain, stretched as you want it, to the sheet.

• • •

Many stains on tablecloths should be given first-aid treatment as soon as they occur, instead of waiting until the cloth is laundered.

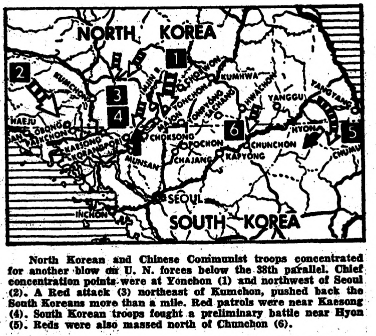
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Reds Launch Offensive in Korea; U.S. Works on Japanese Treaty; Army Calls for 80,000 Draftees

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



North Korean and Chinese Communist troops concentrated for another blow on U. N. forces below the 38th parallel. Chief concentration points were at Yonchon (1) and northwest of Seoul (2). A Red attack (3) northeast of Kumchon, pushed back the South Koreans more than a mile. Red patrols were near Kaesong (4). South Korean troops fought a preliminary battle near Hyon (5). Reds were also massed north of Chunchon (6).

KOREA:

The Story Repeated

The story of the Korean battle seemed to repeat itself. Forced to withdraw from North Korea after pushing the Communists out of South Korea and almost to the Manchurian border, U. N. forces received the full force of Chinese and North Korean troops as they plunged south of the 38th parallel.

U. N. troops gave ground and further retreats appear in store for them. The main feature of the attack was the overwhelming numbers of Chinese and North Koreans rushing U.N. defense positions. At least 200,000 men were thrown into the first attack.

The Communist plan for the conquest of South Korea was to separate the eastern and western sections of the defense line, isolate them and destroy them at will.

Meanwhile, observers who recently returned from Korea report the morale of the soldier at the battlefront much better than that on the homefront.

Americans at home were pictured as frightened, frustrated, and swept with recurrent waves of defeatism and despair. The man in battle were pictured as neither frightened nor discouraged.

There was no criticism of American leadership in the war or criticism of the fighting ability of any nation's troops.

ARMY:

New Call Issued

The army called for 80,000 draftees in March, raising total draft quotas to 450,000 since the Korean outbreak. Eighty thousand had already been scheduled for January and February.

With the armed forces building toward a manpower total of some 3½ million as rapidly as possible, the army anticipated a combat strength equivalent to 24 divisions when the current expansion goal is reached next July 1.

An infantry division numbers 18,000 men and is a self contained fighting unit with supporting weapons such as tanks and artillery. At the beginning of the Korean conflict the army had 10 divisions, only one at full war strength. It had 11 regular divisions, with four national guard divisions and two guard regimental combat teams (usually 5,000 men) as of January 1.

Selective Service officials reported 217,000 men had been delivered to the army up to January.

TAXES:

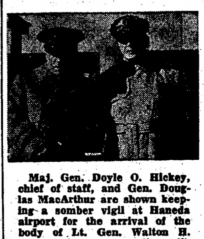
Higher in 1951

With the new congress in session, President Truman was expected to ask for more taxes at any moment to meet the mounting cost of the nation's defense.

Although the size of the new tax program was not disclosed, one administration official reported the President would try to put the government as nearly as possible on a pay-as-you-go basis. The program, however, will include higher personal and corporation levies.

It seems unlikely that a new tax program can bring expenditures and receipts into balance because spending for the fiscal year 1951 may reach $75,000,000,000. The present tax program, including the excess-profits tax, will yield revenues of only about $45,000,000,000.

Generals Wait



Maj. Gen. Doyle O. Hickey, chief of staff, and Gen. Douglas MacArthur are shown keeping a somber vigil at Haneda airport for the arrival of the body of Lt. Gen. Walton H. Walker, late commanding officer of the 8th U. S. army, who was killed in an accident in Korea. Walker's body was being sent to the U. S. for burial in Arlington cemetery.

JAPAN:

U.S. Plans Treaty

The United States made it clear, if in a round-about way, that Japan will get a peace treaty. The U. S. handed Russia a note that said in effect that this country was going to negotiate a treaty—without Russia if necessary.

The important item in the note from the American viewpoint was the paragraph that stated: The United States believes it is reasonable for Japan, upon conclusion of a peace treaty, to make arrangements for self-defense which could "include provision for the stationing in Japan of troops of the United States and other nations."

In other words, the U. S. made it clear that Japan would be allowed to rearm and that this country has every intention of keeping Japan in the democratic column.

The note let fly with a haymaker by stating that rearming Japan was necessary because "irresponsible militarism has not been driven from the world."

The note told the Russians that the Formosa question must be settled in the light of the U.N. charter, "the obligation of which prevail over any other international agreement."

This appeared to be a diplomatic way of telling the Soviet that the U. S. does not consider itself bound to hand Formosa over to the Chinese Communists whose armies are fighting U.N. forces in Korea.

CASUALTIES:

Total at 38,325

As of January 1 the army had announced casualties in the Korean fighting totaling 38,325. That was an increase of almost 2,000 over the previous casualty list.

The number of dead mounted to 6,432, including 5,742 killed in action. 684 who died of wounds and six dead among those who had been reported missing.

There were 27,012 wounded, including the 684 who later died of their injuries. The number of missing were listed at 4,753.

Of the total, the army suffered 32,066 casualties, the marines 5,524, the navy 429 and the air force 306.

MARCH OF DIMES

March of Dimes Fund Campaign

The 1951 March of Dimes campaign began Monday throughout the United States as a massive attack against the only epidemic disease known to man that is still on the increase—a disease that in the last three years has stricken more than 100,000 people and cost the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis an unprecedented $58,000,000 for patient-care alone.

In 1950 March of Dimes funds had assisted in some measure more than 54,000 polio victims at a cost of $20,000,000. The national fund at the moment is at the lowest point it has been since the organization was founded in 1938, officials reported.

The foundation reported four out of every five of the stricken needed—and received—financial assistance.

Licenses, Training Urged For Sitters

State legislatures and city councils throughout the nation, have been petitioned to pass laws requiring the licensing of all baby sitters, private kindergartens, day care agencies, and nursery and play schools.

It is suggested that such licensing be regulatory in nature and not for revenue.

The present lack of standards for these persons and institutions is highly detrimental to the health, safety, and general welfare of infants and pre-school-age children, petitioners believe. While some of the more progressive cities and states have already begun to inquire into the matter of licensing pre-school centers, entirely too many have been lax and indifferent to this need, many parents contend. Little or nothing has been done, to date, by city and state governing bodies to require physical examinations of baby sitters.

Some parents think baby sitters should, in addition, be required to obtain the signatures of two persons in their community, testifying to their moral character and reliability. They believe that regular courses of study should be required of all baby sitters and directors and their assistants in day care agencies and nursery and play schools and suggest that, as a temporary measure, these courses could be made available in the form of evening classes sponsored by local civic groups or governing bodies.

Save Money On This Home Mixed Cough Syrup

Big Saving. No Cooking. So Easy.

You'll be surprised how quickly and easily you can relieve coughs due to colds, when you try this splendid recipe. It gives you about four times as much cough medicine for your money, and you'll find it truly wonderful for real relief.

Make a syrup with 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water. No cooking needed. (Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.) Then put 2½ ounces of Pinex (obtained from any druggist) in a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of medicine that will please you by its quick action. It never spoils, and tastes fine—children love it.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action in coughs and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

FOR EXTRA CONVENIENCE GET NEW READY-MIXED, READY-TO-USE PINEX!

Look at all these EXTRA FEATURES!

Yes, you can believe your own eyes . . . You can take a good look and see why Firestone Tires pull better and last longer.

Notice the bars. You'll see they're curved to cup and grip the soil for a firm, sure hold to eliminate slippage.

Examine the openings between the bars. See how they flare out at the shoulders to permit automatic soil release. You'll notice there's no "wedged-in" pinching nor bar-end soil cramping.

Look at the treads of these tires. Observe how wide, how flat they are for full traction contact, long, even tread life.

Prize Livestock

Livestock owners bringing their animals home after competition in state and county fairs are advised to keep them apart from home herds for 30 days—just in case they may have picked up a contagious disease that is slow in showing up. The American Veterinary Medical association says there is always a chance that show stock may be exposed to infection in transit or while on the fair grounds, yet it may take three weeks before signs of illness become apparent. In the meantime, quarantining them protects the home herd from exposure.

Institute For 4-H Leaders

Thursday, January 25, has been set as the date for the annual 4H leaders institute for local adult and junior leaders of the 19 4H clubs in Marshall county, County Agent F. W. Forbes announces.

The meeting will be held in Newfolden in the high school beginning at 10:00 a.m. and continuing until 3:30 p.m.

• • • •

"Helping to develop well-rounded individuals through 4-H" will be the theme of the one-day meeting. Discussions will cover such subjects as friendship of leaders and parents, planned recreation, participation in democratically organized clubs, expanding 4-H projects, better personal health, sharing in community programs, and maturing in citizenship.

A member of the Newfolden club will give a safety demonstration on scotchlighting, as a special feature of the institute.

Principal speakers for the event will be Osgood Magnuson, district 4H club supervisor and Mrs. Carol Shubeck, state 4-H club agent.

• • • •

The county 4H Radio Speaking contest will be held in connection with the institute.

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

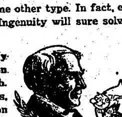
Wondering what's going to happen in the New Year 1951 is like waiting for a blizzard to blow in from Montana. You hope it isn't going to be as bad as it sounds, and you keep thinkin' that maybe the wind will change so you get sunny skies instead. I guess the nice thing about life is that most of the things we worry about never happen anyway.

Except when you're in the business of making electricity. Then the unexpected always pops up . . . and I'm not talking about electric toasters. For instance, a truck broke off one of our poles up near Winger, Minn., not long ago.

Ben Lokken, local superintendent at Mahnomen, reported it this way: "The truck was turning into Winger and it so happened there was a young woman taking pictures of an Indian statue by the Sioux Oil Company. This woman was in a bathing suit . . . and the driver forgot he was driving a truck until he hit our pole."

Well, it's the unusual little things that make my job so interesting anyway. Like the fellow down in Arkansas who beats his competitors to market by running a network of soil-heating cable under his vegetable beds.

Of course, up here in the frigid Northland, it's not vegetables we're worried about — it's getting that car, truck or tractor started on cold mornings. For my money, you can't beat an electric engine heater — either the headbolt engine heater or some other type. In fact, even an electric heat lamp will do a good job. Ingenuity will sure solve a lot of problems.



It's ingenuity that puts America way ahead of everybody else. Thomas Edison had it when he invented the light bulb. And Mr. Edison had a lot of other things, too, including a big chunk of common sense. Here's what he said — many years ago — about government in business: "There is far more danger in public monopoly than there is in a private monopoly, for when government goes into business it can always SHIFT THE LOSSES TO THE TAXPAYERS.

"The government never really goes into business, for it never makes ends meet, and that is the first requisite of business. It just mixes a little business with a lot of politics, and no one ever gets a chance to find out what is actually going on."

Mr. Edison sure put a lot of LIGHT on that subject!

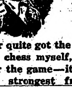
From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh



Friendship—Four Thousand Miles Apart

Never quite got the hang of how to play chess myself, but I'll say this for the game—it started one of the strongest friendships I know of: between Dad Wilson in our town and a fellow in Sudbury, England.

The two of them have never met or seen each other—but for eight or nine years they've been playing chess by mail together. Dad puzzles over the Englishman's latest letter, takes a couple of days to think it over, and then airmails a chart of his next move.

Dad always thinks best with a mellow glass of beer beside his chessboard. And the fellow in England writes that he does the same. "Almost as if we were in the same room," says Dad contentedly.

From where I sit, you can talk about diplomacy and foreign policy, but it's often little friendly things—like a game of chess or a glass of beer—that can make for tolerance and understanding . . . between people of different nations, between folks here at home!

NO OTHER STATE LEVIES TAXES LIKE THESE

It may surprise you to know that the iron ore industry of Minnesota pays an occupation and royalty tax at a rate double the usual corporate income tax rate paid by other industries. But more surprising still is this fact: No other state taxes any substantial natural resource — iron ore, coal, oil or whatever — as heavily as this state taxes iron ore. See Exhibit A . . .

EXHIBIT A: IRON ORE TAXES IN CHIEF ORE STATES

OTHER STATES	VS. — THIS STATE
MICHIGAN: No special tax on iron ore. Ore pays same taxes as other industries.	MINNESOTA: Ore industry pays 12% occupation and royalty tax, vs. 6.3% corporate income tax paid by other industries.
ALABAMA: Iron ore property taxes levied on same basis as other property taxes. Also a severance tax on ore at rate of 3¢ per ton.	MINNESOTA: Ore property taxes assessed at much higher rate than other property taxes. (50% of full and true value vs. 33⅓% to 40% on industrial property). Occupation and royalty tax in 1949 amounted to 30¢ a ton.

Christie

A WORD FROM MR. CHRISTIE. "Deposits of first grade iron ore in Minnesota are being exhausted," writes Editor George W. Christie of the Red Lake Falls Gazette, "and efforts are being made to develop low-grade iron. This should be encouraged; not hampered by exorbitant tax rates." Yes, Mr. Christie: what's needed is fair taxation on all types of ore.

WE ONLY WANT FAIR TREATMENT

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota — permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to develop low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry — both in dollars and jobs — for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are or where you live, you may rest assured that

Mrs. T. J. Lillevold, Pioneer of Grygla, Passsd Away Saturday

Family and friends of Mrs. T. J. Lillevold, pioneer of the Grygla community, were shocked to hear of her sudden death on Saturday at her home at Thief River Falls. Funeral services were set for Thursday at the Our Saviors Lutheran church east of Grygla, of which congregation she had been a faithful member since early pioneer days.

Rev. J. M. Erickson will officiate. Present also will be Rev. and Mrs. Halmrast of Maple Bay and Rev. and Mrs. E. O. Sabo of Thief River Falls.

Thone Bratteli was born March 16, 1890 of parents John and Margaret Bratteli in Bykle. Satesdalen, Norway, where she was baptised and confirmed in the Lutheran faith. In 1912 she immigrated to America coming directly to Grygla where she made her home since except for a short time at Grand Forks.

She was united in marriage to T. J. Lillevold, Sept. 11, 1914, making their home in Lee Township, Beltrami County until their retirement from farming a year ago when they moved to Thief River Falls. To this union seven children were born, Clara, Mrs. Emil Boyum; Margaret, Mrs. Allard Morken; Thea Mrs. Manley Anderson; all of Grygla. Caroline, Mrs. Herold Ritch of Inglewood, Calif. Torrance and Johnny of Grygla. One son Arne. preceded her in death.

Besides her sorrowing husband and children she leaves to mourn four brothers and two sisters, Ole Bratteli of Holt, Halvor Bratteli of International Falls, Aanen and Knut Bratteli, Mrs. Gunhild Nesland and Mrs. Thora Trydal all in Norway, Also 10 grandchildren.

In 1948-49 she visited her relatives in Norway.

Mrs. Lillevold was one of the staunch pioneer women who did so much in developing this country. Her faith and trust in God's help strengthened her in bringing up her children to also look to Him for help. In that way her influence will live on and on.

Erickson Funeral Home of Thief River Falls had charge of arrangements. Interment was made in Our Savior's church cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. David Nelson and Deanne and Mrs. Albert Peterson, Dorothy and Grace, all of Gatzke and Mr. and Mrs. John Berget were dinner guests at the Walter Peterson home Sunday.

Card of Thanks

I wish to take this means of expressing sincere thanks to the many friends and relatives who visited me while I was ill. Special thanks to Circle 5 of Nazareth Ladies Aid, and to those who sent so many nice cards.

May God Bless you all.
Mrs. Bertha Hagglund.

Mrs. Bertha Hagglund returned home Saturday from St. Lukes hospital at Thief River Falls where she spent 12 days following an operation.

Week end visitors at the Harold Nohre home were: Mr. and Mrs Bill Schreiner and daughter Linda, James Peterson and Ruth Swanson.

"LAND O' LAKES IS FOR THE FARMER ALL THE WAY!"

says P. C. HINSVERK, owner-patron, Hendricks (Minn.) Creamery

"I've discovered for myself," says Mr. Hinsverk, "that farmers are way ahead dealing with LAND O'LAKES. When you tie-in with LAND O'LAKES you know you're getting treated right. You can see that for sure in higher butterfat returns."

Mr. Hinsverk is right. You know you're getting a square deal with LAND O'LAKES! You're sure of a more stable market and higher average returns over the years. And you can also make worthwhile savings on feed, seed and dairy farm equipment and supplies. So if you sell milk, sell through the farmers' own organization—LAND O'LAKES.

Gilt frames never need anything more than dusting as long as people understand they're supposed to be antiques. If you want to clean them up and forget the antique gag, it can be done by coating the frame with petroleum jelly. Let the jelly stay on about ten minutes before you rub it off with a clean cloth. Or boil a few onions and douse the frame with a cloth dipped in the water the onions were boiled in. Then rinse it off with a cloth dipped in clear water.

Spattered grease on the wallpaper behind your stove can be removed easily if you paint the paper, while it's new, with a coat of colorless shellac. To be more elaborate, you can hang an oilcloth wall rug behind the stove. Or, have the area covered with a large piece of plate glass. Attach it with "corner brackets" or hang it like a mirror.

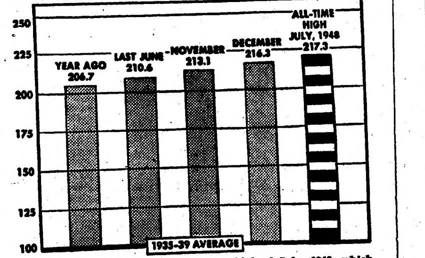
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

President Truman Asks for Unity As Nation Builds Up Armed Might; U. N. Forces Continue to Pull Back

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



With food prices near the all-time high of July, 1948, which was nearly 217.3 per cent of the 1935-39 average, the government drafted a 30-day moratorium on all prices increased. The chart above traces the food price spiral. The moratorium was delayed by disagreement within the government's economic-control organization.

TRUMAN:

Drops Fair Deal

President Truman opened his "State of the Union" message to congress with the words "our country is in a healthy condition." From that point he stressed strength and unity in the face of Communist aggression throughout the world.

One of the remarkable points of the President's message was his apparent willingness to drop his much debated Fair Deal program —for the time being—in order to get on with the business of building up the free world's ability to wage "a full-scale war against Russia," if such conflict becomes necessary.

Mr. Truman's plea for unity was impressive and undoubtedly won him some new friends in a hostile congress. "I ask the congress for unity . . . I do not ask, or expect, unanimity . . . Let us debate the issues, but let every man among us weigh his words and deeds," he said.

Many legislators called the President's speech conciliatory. And despite certain routine political sharpshooting which some Republicans indulged in after his address, it was obvious that the opposition party was affected favorably by his effort to find unity of purpose.

It seems likely that an era of greater co-operation and political peace is in store for the 82nd congress than could have been hoped for a few months ago. The people along the main streets of America may at least see swift and vital decisions made to meet the crisis.

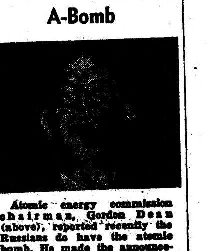
It was also evident from the President's speech that on one point he would not give an inch. He stood unyielding on the issue of military co-operation with western Europe.

The Program

President Truman outlined a 10-point legislative program in his "State of the Union" message to congress:

1. Appropriations for the armed forces build-up.
2. Extension and revision of the draft law, presumably to induct 18-year-olds and extend the draft term from 21 to 27 or 30 months.
3. Military and economic aid to the rest of the free world.
4. Revision and extension of his authority to expand production and control wages, prices, and rents.
5. Improvement of the agricultural laws to help "obtain the kinds of farm products we need for the defense effort." This might include a direct subsidy to farmers to keep from setting farm price ceilings at less than parity.
6. Improvement of labor laws to "help provide stable labor-management relations" and assure "steady" production.
7. Housing and training of defense workers and "the full use of all our man-power resources."
8. Legislation to increase the supply of doctors, nurses, and other medical personnel.
9. Federal aid to the States for elementary and secondary education.
10. A "major increase" in taxes.

A-Bomb



Atomic energy commission chairman, Gordon Dean (above), reported recently the Russians do have the atomic bomb. He made the announcement during a news conference in which he told newsmen that the government will have to cut down its development of atomic energy for peacetime uses because of the international situation.

KOREA:

Pattern Repeated

The pattern of the Korean conflict continued to repeat itself. Following the January 1 attack by Chinese and North Korean Communists on United Nations forces south of the 38th parallel, a general retreat to the south and the old Pusan beachhead continued.

The retreat was along the old "Heartbreak Highway" down which Americans and South Koreans first retreated before the North Korean invaders last July.

It seemed unlikely that United Nations forces would be able to establish a line short of the Pusan beachhead. What would happen after that is anyone's guess.

Some military leaders believe U.N. troops will be able to stand off Communist thrusts with the aid of U.S. fleet guns. It seemed unlikely, however, that a counter-offensive could be launched for months.

It was obvious to every observer that the position of U.N. troops in Korea was steadily growing worse. And there was no indication that their position would get better.

FARMING:

Some Curbs Lifted

The government removed all restrictions on production of wheat and corn for 1951 in an effort to maintain safe reserves of these vital bread and livestock feed grains under the national emergency.

The only crops still under production controls are some types of tobacco, peanuts and rice. It is possible that restrictions may be eased on peanuts and rice.

The action came too late for additional planting of witer wheat but is expected to increase spring wheat planting which makes up 30 per cent of the nation's crop.

Farm experts predicted that the unlimited corn acreage would increase the nation's meat supply by at least three pounds per person this year. There was enough meat available in 1950 to supply each person with 145 pounds.

UNITED NATIONS

U. S. Seeks to Brand China Aggressor

Britain's Sir Gladwyn Jebb told the United Nations his country was not yet ready for a final decision on American demands for U.N. condemnation of Red China as an aggressor. He hold the U.N. that to "look well before you leap is a wise maxim in foreign affairs. If we do leap, we should all leap together."

There was an undertone to Jebb's speech, however, that indicated Britain and other countries might go along eventually with the American proposal for a verdict condemning Peiping as an aggressor in Korea.

In many quarters it was believed that Britain, which has recognized Communist China, is leaning more and more to the American view of China's aims in the far east.

TAFT:

Constructive Criticism

In a speech which he called "constructive criticism" of the administration, Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio served notice that the Republican party pledged itself to securing a greater voice in policy making.

The senator based his criticisms on what he called the President's legal right to send American troops to Europe. He added that we "had better commit no American troops to the European continent at this time."

Mr. Taft expressed a tide of thought that has been growing throughout the United States since reverses in Korea, namely, that the defense of Europe was primarily western Europe's responsibility, not ours.

Undoubtedly the most powerful Republican in the senate, Taft seemed to be serving notice on the administration that congress intended to cut in on the President's power to formulate foreign policy. If the Republicans are willing to push the question it could lead to a state of confusion in congress never before seen in a time of crisis.

One of the most startling statements of the senator's speech was the one when he said the U.S. ought to go along, for the time being, in the U.N. for its value as a world forum, but that the instrumentality was mortally weak in having been founded, not upon "justice" but upon the power of its leading members. To the people in the home towns of the country who had placed their faith in the United Nations it was like a blow below the belt.

Was it possible that some of the nation's leading legislators believed that the United Nations was as dead as the League of Nations? Was it possible that some of our prominent leaders favored U.S. withdrawal from the United Nations? Taft's speech put those questions into the minds of many.

Two days after his "policy" speech, Senator Taft announced he was in favor of pulling U.S. troops out of Korea and setting up a new Pacific defense line based on Formosa and Japan. For these he would fight, he said. He then warned that if Russia attacks western Europe "it means war."

CONTROLS:

A Matter of Time

Wage and price controls appeared certain for the nation as it moved toward full mobilization. To the average housewife the need for price controls on food was becoming desperate.

A disagreement within the government's economic-control organization blocked action on a planned 30-day wage-price freeze. The action was a temporary measure to hold the line until enforcement machinery could be set up about March 1.

Price controller Michael V. DiSalle reportedly will need 30,000 workers for a nationwide staff, of whom more than half would be charged with tracking down black marketeers, hoarders, price gougers and other control chiselers.

Some temporary plan to stop the price spiral was considered necessary by most people. At the present rate of increase, food prices would be at an all-time high by March 1 and would bring hardship for fixed income groups. Millions of workers have contracts which grant pay increases as the price index climbs and this group would not suffer.

The people on pensions and white collar workers are hardest hit by any price spiral.

Eisenhower

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower (above), is surrounded by lensmen as he speaks for newsreel and television cameras in the Pentagon during his first press conference after being named commander-in-chief for European armies. He left for a tour of European capitals shortly afterwards, declaring that the defense of western Europe cannot be carried out successfully unless sacrifices of other Atlantic pact nations equal those of the U.S.

DRAFT:

For All 18-Year-Olds

Any day now the defense department will ask congress for a blanket draft of all physically fit 18-year-olds to serve 27 to 30 months in uniform.

There is a question, however, whether or not congress will approve immediately. A number of legislators were reported splitting hairs over the request. Many felt that 18½ was young enough and 24 months long enough.

Machinery Belts

Too much tension strains belts and causes rapid wear on pulley shaft bearings. On the other hand, too little tension produces a flappy, unsteady motion which results in excessive slippage, loss of power, and much belt wear.

Wartime Diet

At the depth of wartime shortages, the Dutch were forced to eat large numbers of their bulbs—a diet that was far from popular, since the bulbs are non-nourishing, unappetizing and contain a disturbing acid.

1951 Cotton Goal

A production goal of 16,000,000 bales of cotton in 1951 has been set by secretary of agriculture. The USDA has also declared that there will be no acreage allotments or marketing quotas for next year.

Natural Tunnel

The Natural tunnel, on the Southern railway, in southwest Virginia, is believed to be the only natural tunnel in the world used by a railroad. It is 100 feet high, 100 to 175 feet wide, and 1,537 feet in length.

College Courses

A Twentieth Century Fund survey shows that the traditional college courses of theology, law and medicine have steadily lost in popularity to courses in education, commerce and engineering.

White Nylon

Too high temperatures while ironing may damage nylon. Repeated ironing at high temperature tends to cause yellowing of white nylon.

Oven Care

Don't use sizzling hot oven for roasting meats. Experts now urge low temperature roasting. Meat shrinks less, needs less fuel and fat spattering is minimized.

Poultry Diseases

Poultry disease germs often ride from farm to farm on feed sacks, in egg cases, or on the shoes and clothing of visitors.

Perspiring Feet

Foot perspiration is a device of the body to get rid of waste material and maintain balanced body temperature.

First Potatoes

It is believed North America's first potatoes were brought from the Bermudas to Virginia in 1621.

Simon Bolivar

1951 Pig Crop

Indications are that the 1951 pig crop will be larger than in 1950, according to U.S. department of agriculture estimates.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Dorinda considers abandoning the masquerade and returning to her own station of life and her own identity. She is lonesome in her role as Dorinda La-Croix and wants to return to her own self as Stella Moore, secretary. She has consented to play the part of a dead girl in order to help keep alive that girl's grandmother who, she is told, might die of shock if she knew the real Dorinda was dead. At Edward Thorndyke's insistence she decides to remain and play out the part for his mother, Dorinda's grandmother. Edward declines to let Dorinda attend the movies with nurse Carol, which the former resents. Cleve Adams gives Dorinda a puppy to keep her company.

CHAPTER VI

"You know I haven't any rouge. Cleve, he's adorable." She set the little dog down on the ground where he promptly pounced upon one of her feet, worrying her shoestring and growling with mock fury.

"Three months old, sound in wind and limb, housebroken and possessed of exceptional intelligence," Cleve said proudly. "Do you want him?"

"Do I want him? Of course, I want him. He's the very nicest present I've ever had in my whole life."

"Well, you didn't come after him, Dorinda, and somehow I had a feeling you never would come." Cleve sat down on one of the brick steps, his back against a white pillar. "I thought perhaps you needed a lift after what happened yesterday, so here I am, me and my dog—your dog, I mean."

"Cleve." Dorinda's voice was only a whisper. The laughter had faded from her face. "They found he—Taylor—had taken some kind of a sleeping medicine before he crashed. Hawley phoned and told Uncle Edward."

Cleve whistled. "The devil he did! What do you suppose Taylor did that for?"

Edward Phones Hawley About Taylor Inquest

"I don't imagine they think he did it intentionally. It wouldn't make any sense. I think they believe that girl—the one that looked like me—gave it to him in his drink."

"So then it's murder!" Cleve said softly.

Dorinda's hand pressed against her mouth. Cleve had said it—the word she wouldn't let herself speak. He threw a quick glance at her face.

"It's a horrible thing. But people are murdered every day, Dorinda. And we didn't know him."

"Oh, well, the sheriff himself will be back in a few days. Poole's a different dish of tea. A shrewd guy though I'm not sure how he will stack up in a case like this.

"Let's talk about something else, honey. I have a message for you. As I mentioned a few minutes ago, I had a feeling you'd never come over to my place after that pup, or for any other reason. So my mother has issued a special invitation to you to come over for dinner. And that, from her, is equivalent to a royal command. I want you to meet my mother, Dorinda. When can you come?"

Dorinda bent over the dog, her loosened hair hiding her face. "That's nice of you, Cleve. I'll let you know. I must ask Uncle Edward—I wouldn't want to interfere with any of his plans."

"What a dutiful child you are. A rare specimen in this day and age. When you get married, Dorinda, are you going to obey your husband as you do your uncle?"

"No, indeed. A husband is, as you say, Cleve, a different dish of tea."

"I might have known it," Cleve grumbled. "But I suppose a fellow can't have everything." He glanced down at his watch. "I'm supposed to be in town right this minute. I've got to step on it." He gave one of her curls a yank before he stepped into his car. "Don't forget that invitation."

Carol called to her softly from the hall. "Do you know where Mr. Thorndyke is? His mother has been asking for him."

"If I'm not mistaken, Uncle Edward and Fay are driving in the gate now," Dorinda said. She was glad of the interruption.

Taylor had been killed early Tuesday morning. The inquest was held the following Thursday. No one from Thorndyke House attended. But early in the afternoon, Edward telephoned to Hawley.

He had hesitated about doing this. "Perhaps it's better to stay entirely clear of the matter," he said uneasily. The three of them, Edward, Fay and Dorinda, had lingered over luncheon in the gold-and white dining room on the west side of the house.

In spite of Edward's decision, he telephoned Hawley some time later in the day. Fay had left the house and Dorinda had taken her dog and gone down to the beach for a romp in the sand. Edward met her as she came up the wooden steps, the puppy at her heels.

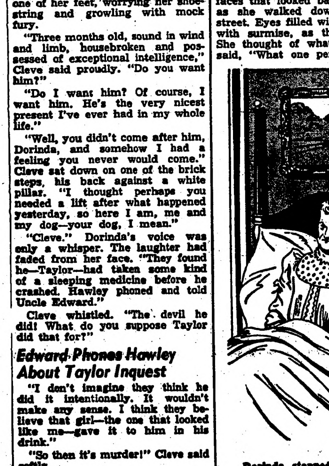
"Nothing new came out at the inquest," he told her abruptly. "The jury brought in a verdict to the effect that death was caused by the automobile crash, said crash being the result of the drug Taylor had taken. They recommended investigation be continued to determine whether the drug was self-administered, taken by accident or was given him by someone else, possibly with homicidal intent."

Dorinda's brows knit in a puzzled frown. "Why do you think about it, Uncle Edward? Maybe it did seem queer—Taylor recognizing me that day and then dying that night. But it can't be anything but a coincidence. Let's forget it."

Edward's gaze was on the far horizon. "Forgetting — that's a thing more easily said than done."

He was right, Dorinda found, when she went to the village late that afternoon.

There was a new alertness in the faces that looked back at Dorinda as she walked down the village street. Eyes filled with questioning, with surmise, as they met hers. She thought of what Edward had said, "What one person in Trentville knows, the whole town knows."



Dorinda stepped back to admire the picture that Mrs. Thorndyke, leaning back among her pillows, made.

She found Anne frankly inquisitive. But somehow she didn't resent it in Anne. In fact, she found it a relief to hear spoken the thing the whole town was thinking.

"Oh, Dorinda, isn't it exciting?" Anne bubbled. "They say you were questioned by the police. Weren't you thrilled? I do believe you're a femme fatale—one of those women who attract strange and fascinating adventures."

Dorinda laughed in spite of herself. "Anne, you dope, how you do run on. By the police, I suppose you mean Mr. Hawley."

Anne grimaced. "Well, perhaps he is a little lacking in lurid qualities. A nice boy, though rather inclined to blush. I imagine, without half trying, you wrapped him around your little finger and reduced him to an abject mass of apology."

'Grandmother' in First Probing of Dorinda

"I didn't even half try." Dorinda sat down in the Windsor chair beside Anne's desk. "And the apologies were all to Uncle Edward for daring to connect his precious niece 'even in thought'—quotation marks—with a man like Taylor. Seriously though, Anne, I didn't think it funny."

"I've never told this to a soul, Dorinda," she said in a conspiratorial whisper, "but that night after you'd been gone for about half an hour, Taylor came in here. He pretended to be interested in the books but what he really wanted was to ask questions about you. How long you'd been here and if you had money, oh, a lot of things."

Dorinda's slim fingers gripped the book she held in her lap. "Did you tell him?"

"Not much. I told him I knew practically nothing about you. He'd never lived in a small town or he wouldn't have swallowed that tale. What do you suppose was the idea? Do you think he had aspirations to marry the village heiress?"

"Your guess is as good as mine," Dorinda countered.

"Dorinda," Anne said excitedly, "maybe he was a Nazi spy—or a Gestapo agent. He might have followed you from France—"

"Oh Anne, we're not at war with Germany. Not yet. Anyway, it wasn't that important."

"You're destroying all my romantic ideas," Anne said ruefully. "Getting down to brass tacks, I suppose Taylor was just a wolf trying to make a pretty girl."

"Thanks for the adjective."

"It is eerie, isn't it? I can just see Taylor stalking you through the twilight." Anne shivered. "Gee, I'm scaring myself. Here's a new novel your grandmother will like, Dorinda. Just came in this morning."

Outside the air had grown cooler. The wind brought with it the chill from the sea. Trees against the sunset cast black bars of shadow across the road, and in the fields the poppies closed their brilliant petals against the coming night. Dorinda was glad to see the dark facade of Thorndyke House loom up before her. After all, it was, for the time, home. As much of a home as she could have.

Carol was passing through the upper hall. "Tell Grandmother I'll bring her book in to her in a few minutes." Dorinda called.

She picked up the library book in its brown-jacket and went down the hall to Mrs. Thorndyke's room. Grandmother's face brightened as she saw her.

"How pretty you look, Dorinda." Her thin fingers touched the bright folds of the red dress. "I like colors with vitality in them." Her eyes, meeting Dorinda's, held affection and a touch of wistfulness.

"You're looking extremely elegant yourself, Grand'-mere." Dorinda stepped back to admire the picture Mrs. Thorndyke, leaning back among her pillows, made. "Like a French marquise—the way they're popularly supposed to look, I mean."

"Carol dressed me up. Sometimes I think she treats me as if I were a life-sized doll."

"A woman of my years wearing lipstick!" Grandmother scoffed. "Carol bought it—a new shade, 'Ash Geranium,' she called it. Light rose with a hint of mauve."

Dorinda Asked to Show Childhood Cut Scar

"I like it," Dorinda decided. She smiled at Carol who sat sewing under a shaded lamp, the light touching her bent black head.

"In my youth, only women of a certain class used rouge and lipstick," Mrs. Thorndyke asserted. "But, old as I am, I can still accept new ideas. Especially when they become me," she added, with a twinkle. "Tell me what you've been doing with yourself, Dorinda."

So Dorinda told her of Cleve's visit the day before, of his gift of the wire-haired pup— "His name is Randy, Grandmother, and I'm bringing him in to see you as soon as he quiets down a bit." She told of her walk to Trentville that afternoon, of the acacias in bloom, of Anne at the library.

There was a light knock, followed by the opening of the door. Fay came into the room. She was dressed for dinner, poised and lovely as she always was, her cool beauty without a flaw. She smiled at Mrs. Thorndyke, a smile which curved her lips but did not reach her eyes.

"Dear Aunt Lucy," she said softly, "I didn't know you already had company. You mustn't let Dorinda tire you."

"Dorinda never tires me," the older woman said shortly. "Don't stand there, Fay. Sit down."

Dorinda sat close to the bedside. Fay moved to a chair a few feet away. She sat down and leaned against the cushioned back, her slim hands folded in her lap. She did not, Dorinda noticed, wear the diamond ring Edward had given her.

"I love this room," Fay said. "It's a perfect setting for you, Aunt Lucy." She looked about her, her gaze lingering on the papered walls, the polished furniture. Her eyes swept past Carol as if the young nurse did not exist.

Mrs. Thorndyke was speaking again. "Dorinda and I were talking over old times," she said sweetly to Fay, and looked back at Dorinda again.

"You were a dear little girl, though naughty sometimes. Like Laura, I thought then, though you've changed since. Do you remember when I visited you and your mother in Paris? It was spring and the chestnut trees were in bloom. Paris—will it ever be the same again? At least I'll never see it."

Her face grew bright once more. "But one thing I wager you do remember, child. I hadn't thought of it myself for years. The afternoon your mother left you with me and I dozed off in my chair. When I woke you were gone and I started to search for you. I found you in your mother's room—you were standing on a chair in front of her wardrobe to reach the flask of perfume you had wanted and which she had hidden from you on a high shelf. When I came in, I startled you and you fell. I'll never forget—the room so strong of rose scent, broken glass on the carpet, blood everywhere and you screaming. I was really frightened." She shivered, living those moments again.

"It was a bad cut, Dorinda. I thought it would never stop bleeding. And it left a bad scar on your wrist." She laid her hand over Dorinda's. "Is that why you wear this heavy bracelet, my dear?" Her fingers fumbled at the clasp. "Let me see, Dorinda. Proof of your grandmother's negligence."

Economical Cough Relief! Try This Home Mixture
No Cooking. Makes Big Saving.
To get quick and satisfying relief from coughs due to colds, mix this recipe in your kitchen.
First, make a syrup with 2 cups granulated sugar and one cup of water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.
Then get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist. This is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action on throat and bronchial irritations.
Put Pinex into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. Thus you make a full pint of splendid medicine—about four times as much for your money. It never spoils, and tastes fine.
And for quick, blessed relief, it is surprising. You can feel it take hold in a way that means business. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, eases soreness. Makes breathing easy, and lets you get restful sleep. Just try it, and if not pleased, your money will be refunded.

Personal To Women With Nagging Backache
As we get older, stress and strain, over-exertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Getting up nights or frequent passages may result from minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or dietary indiscretions.
If your discomforts are due to these causes, don't wait, try Doan's Pills, a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While these symptoms may often otherwise occur, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Right Under Our Nose!

Sometime back, we got word from the Governer, asking if we wanted to use the State Fire Inspection Team—a group of experts they send around to communities to inspect public buildings.

We sent a letter saying: "Okey! Give us the once-over!" They came down, all right—last week.

After the inspection, we got their report. Came out pretty well, all told. Town Hall and the School were O.K. Post Office just needed more sandbuckets. In fact, everything got a clean bill of health, except—the Fire Station!

From where I sit, we volunteer firemen had just been too blamed busy keeping everyone else on the ball—and not realizing our own firehouse was not up to snuff. Like the man who worries so much about his neighbors—about whether they work hard enough, about whether they can really afford their new car, about their enjoying a temperate glass of beer—that he forgets to take a good critical look at himself now and then.

WHY PICK ON ONE INDUSTRY?

COMPARISON—Minnesota corporate income taxes of the 6,136 corporations paying those taxes in 1949, vs. special state taxes on iron ore mining:

Paid by 1,116 manufacturing corporations in Minnesota. $5,984,981
Paid by 2,845 corporations in wholesale and retail trade in Minnesota $6,277,723
Paid by 2,175 other corporations in Minnesota $3,283,103
OCCUPATION AND ROYALTY TAXES PAID BY THE 29 IRON MINING COMPANIES IN MINNESOTA $13,670,123
Total iron ore taxes paid in 1949, including property taxes $26,927,951

"GOOD NEWS TO MINNESOTA"

MRS. WETMORE

More low-grade iron ore is likely to be processed soon in this state, notes Mrs. L. E. Wetmore, editor of the Mountain Lake Observer. "Surely," she comments, "this is good news to Minnesota. It means railroad extensions and harbor developments as well as plant investment. In the past, some have felt that no iron ore tax was big enough. It will pay to be fair with the mining interests and to encourage them to even greater investments . . ."

If you believe in fair play, you may be surprised to know what a world of difference there is in the way Minnesota industries are taxed.

Most Minnesota industries pay a state corporate income tax at a 6.3% rate. But the iron ore industry pays an occupation and royalty tax at a 12% rate. Moreover, this industry is not allowed many deductions granted others. The result?—See box score at left.

Few Minnesotans realize how much heavier the tax load is on iron ore. Few realize how this can hurt the future of the whole state. One informed group, however, does have the facts: the newspaper editors of this state. What do they say about ore taxes? See typical comment quoted in this space.

WERE YOU AWARE—

—that Minnesota's iron ore industry must turn increasingly to the leaner low-grade and taconite ores as the high-grades run out?

—that processing these leaner ores is a manufacturing operation calling for hundreds of millions to be invested in great "ore factories?"

—that despite higher costs, Minnesota's ore must be produced cheaply enough to meet increased competition from other ore areas?

—that more ore factories can be built . . . more jobs created . . . if Minnesota's ore industry is taxed as fairly as other industries?

A fair deal for Minnesota's iron ore means a good deal for you

. . . you're standing under a storm cloud. It's not a big cloud — YET, but every storm starts in just the same way.

No real American wants any part of SOCIALISM, yet a small minority, for many years, have been trying to sell us such socialistic schemes as "GOVERNMENT POWER" . . . Plans dressed up in slick promises that must be paid for with YOUR tax money.

Don't let the cloud of socialism hang over Reddy's head . . . don't let it spread a dark curtain over the whole nation. DON'T abandon a sound business system that provides you with ALL the electricity you want, CHEAPER than ever before!

Obituary of Mrs. Strandquist

Rites Held at Bethlehem Lutheran Church For Mrs. Anna Strandquist Monday

Funeral services were held from Bethlehem Lutheran church, Newfolden on Monday afternoon, January 22 for Mrs. Anna Strandquist, pioneer resident of this community, who passed away at St. Lukes hospital, Thief River Falls on Monday, January 15 at the age of 84 years, 7 months and 28 days. Rev. E. J. Raaum officiated at the service. Pallbearers were six grandsons, Floyd Holmstrom, Ray Holmstrom, Loyal Holmstrom, Archie Edeen, Einer Strandquist and Erwin Strandquist. Interment was made in Opdahl cemetery.

Anna Erika Strandquist was born May 17, 1866 at Mosjon, Dorothea, Sweden. She spent her girlhood in Sweden and there was married to Anders Edeen. In 1904 she came to America, a widow with her seven children, and settled in Marshall County. In 1908 she was united in marriage to Nels O. Strandquist. To this union two daughters were born. She was christian mother and a good neighbor, who was respected and loved by all who knew her. In 1936 her second husband passed away and after a few years she sold the farm and since that time has been living with her various children. This winter she had been making her home with her daughter, Mrs. August Holmstrom of near Newfolden.

* * * *

Mrs. Strandquist is survived by five sons and two daughters: Viard Edeen of Kenistino, Sas., Canada; Sven of Calgary, Albt., Can.; Fritz and Agda (Mrs. August Holmstrom) of Newfolden; Arthur of Clareshomn, Albt., Can.; Fredolph of Detroit, Mich.; Alice (Mrs. Algot Skoglund) of Holt. Eight step-children: Leander Strandquist Bertha, Mrs. Jonas Heggstrom); Erick, Nils, Ole and Mary (Mrs. James Ellis), all of Canada; Jonas of Cutbank, Mont. and Andrew of Argyle, and a sister, Mrs. Dora Cota of Seattle, Wash.; a sister-in-law, Mrs. Liza Hendrickson of Strandquist and many grandchildren, great grandchildren, nieces and nephews.

* * *

She was preceded in death by her husbands, one son, one daughter and ten brothers and sisters. May she rest in peace.

Those attending from a distance were Swen and Arthur Edeen of Calgary, Alberta.; Fred Edeen of Detroit, Mich., Art and Dallas Holmstrom of Minneapolis, Mrs. Glendon Hanson of North Branch; Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Holmstrom of New Brighton, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Holmstrom of Begley, Jonas Strandquist of Cut Bank, Mont. Mr. and Mrs, Andrew Strandquist and Einer of Argyle, Ethel Strandquist of Grand Forks, Arlet Strandquist and Delores Edeen of Bemidji, Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Strandquist of TRF, Mrs. Raymond Knutson of Warren. Mr. Brandt was married recently and they also met his wife.

Casper Dale, 64, Cando, N. D. former Holt resident, died Jan. 14 from injuries received the previous night in an accident. He is survived by his widow, two sons and two daughters.

Ed O'Hara, 82, of Thief River Falls, died at his home Jan. 19. The O'Hara family lived on a farm west of Holt for a short period many years ago.

Oscar Carlson received the sad news on Saturday that an uncle, Magnee Carlson, 84, of Red Wing, had passed away.

ASK 'U' FARM

A.—Put a piece of ice on waxed paper over the spot to harden the gum; then chip off as much as possible with a dull knife. Next apply a dry cleaning fluid such as carbon tetrachloride on and around the outside of the gum. Let it remain three or four minutes; then lift off the gum with a dull knife. Repeat the treatment if necessary.

Albert Lea — Cap is only seven months old and already has lost an eye in an auto accident. Which adds pathos to the recent experience of this gallant cocker spaniel. His 10-year-old master, John Reed, said Cap was just playing with some four-footed pals when he disappeared. No amount of search revealed his whereabouts until some boys peered into a dark hole in the snow. Cap's whimper brought speedy rescue after two weeks of isolation. The manhole cover was found in the snow half a block away.

The World of Childhood

The lies children tell are not always lies.

According to Childcraft Advisory Service, they are often signs of a lively imagination which parents do well to encourage. Without imagination there is neither sympathy nor creative talent.

Imagination can be developed to build bridges and cathedrals. It was people with imagination who invented television, bicycles can openers and the other countless wonders and conveniences of modern civilization.

Yet imagination in a very small child is often discouraged by well meaning parents who mistake his perfectly normal "flights of fancy" for lies.

Imaginative tales of childhood can also reflect desires which are unfulfilled. For example, when a child has no other children with whom to play, he often creates imaginary playmates whom he talks to and about.

Of course, Childcraft writers point out, there is a difference between fancies of a very small child and the deliberate lying of older children. The former cannot distinguish between real and imaginery world, while the latter know the difference, but ignore it.

Science is ever pressing into the unknown regions of mind and stratosphere with psychiatry and rocket ships.

Strange worlds, it has discovered, include a magic land where dolls talk, furniture moves by itself, and toy cars get lonesome — just like people — when they are left alone too long.

Typha Approved for Filling

O. T. Ness received the following communication from Rep. Harold C. Hagen relative to the request for continued approval of typha-filled cushions for use on motorboats of Classes A, 1 and 2.

"As a result of the public hearing at Coast Guard Headquarters on Jan. 30 it has been decided to permit the continued use of typa until such time as additional data can be obtained relative to the suitabltity of this material after extended use."

The growing needs for typha as a water repellent, bouyant filling for life preservers, cushions, toys, jacket linings and other things is evident in that requests for it are coming from all over United States. The Ness Typha company here are the manufacturers of Typha which is made from cattails. The approval of its use by the U. S. Coast Guard will, no doubt, induce companies making all types or products, seek its use for fillings. Mr. Ness is at all times experimenting with Typha. His latest is spraying it with a fine oil. Experience has also taught that aging cattails after picking them makes a finer whiter fluff than the newly picked cattails. Mr. Ness has several sample products on display that are possibilities of its use.

Co. Red Cross Quota Set

In spite of the fact that the national goal has been increased by a third, Marshall county's 1951 Red Cross fund drive quota has been raised only $15, E. N. Mattson, county chairman, annouced this week. Slogan for the drive will be "Mobilize for Defense".

Quota this year will be $5,280 of which over $2,800 will stay in the county for local use and the remainder will be sent to national headquarters. Emery A. Johnson of Warren has been appointed as county chairmsn of the drive which will begin in March.

New Railroad Ballaster

A mechanically operated, power track ballaster has been developed for railroad use. It is capable of covering up to one mile a day, compared with 1,500 feet a day by use of conventional power hand tampers and a double crew. The ballaster is self-propelled. A gasoline motor lifts a cross-head member which spans the length of railroad tie and carries 32 tamping shoes. These shoes are dropped on the ballast with a pile-driver action, at the same time working the ballast under the ties.

Origin of "Cubit"

The word "cubit" is derived from the Latin word "cubitus" which means bend. In olden times, people used the arm as a measurement and the distance between the bend of the elbow and the tip of the second finger was called a "cubit." Of course this varied according to one's age and size of the arm. It was an approximate figure.

Freight Train Haulage

The transportation output of the average freight train reached an all-time high in 1950, being equivalent to moving more than 20,000 tons of freight one mile in an hour, which is nearly 14 per cent above the peak output of the years of World War II and almost three times as much as it was 30 years ago.

"Castles in Spain"

Dreamers who indulge in wild flights of fancy that have little likelihood of coming true, are often accused of "building castles in Spain." According to The Book House For Children, the expression originated during the Moorish wars when so many castles were destroyed.

Save $2.00 On This Home Mixed Cough Syrup

Easily Mixed. Needs No Cooking.

Cough medicines usually contain a large quantity of plain syrup—a good ingredient, but one which you can easily make at home. Mix 2 cups of granulated sugar with 1 cup of water. No cooking! Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Then get from your druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. This gives you a full pint of wonderful medicine for coughs due to colds. It makes a real saving because it gives you about four times as much for your money. Never spoils, and children love it.

This is actually a surprisingly effective, quick-acting cough medicine. Swiftly, you feel it taking hold. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, makes breathing easy.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, a most reliable, soothing agent for throat and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

Value Your Health More Than Riches

Some folks think that fine clothes and fine, big houses are the most important things in life, but these things really don't mean too much if a person doesn't feel well enough to enjoy them. Most folks don't realize this, but Mrs. Lucy Braswell, of Route 2, Stone Mountain, Ga., realizes it very well. Mrs. Braswell takes HADACOL, and by taking HADACOL she found she is helping her system overcome deficiencies of Vitamins B₁, B₂, Niacin and Iron, which HADACOL contains.

Here is Mrs. Braswell's own statement: "I have been sick for some time with stomach disturbances. I began taking HADACOL and I have been taking it about six weeks. I am so much better and much stronger. I will continue to take HADACOL. It sure has helped me. I tell my friends about HADACOL. I can't praise HADACOL too much. I am 59 years old."

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 hospital economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied. —Adv.

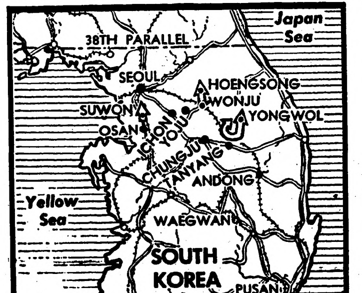
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Government Issues Stopgap Order Freezing All Wages and Prices; AEC Conducts Atomic Experiments

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



The mystery of the vanishing Chinese armies who failed to take advantage of their breakthrough into South Korea remained unsolved as U.N. forces advanced toward the 38th parallel. The advance was not an all-out push, but a probing action by U.N. forces in an effort to locate the enemy.

WAGES-PRICES:

A Stopgap Order

A stopgap order freezing wages and prices was issued by the government. Although unsatisfactory as far as the average consumer was concerned, the measure at least was a stab toward stopping the wage-price spiral that had swept across the nation in the last few months.

The main effect of the order was that it brought to a standstill hundreds of collective-bargaining negotiations in industry. Prices on a number of goods and services were frozen, but there were also a number of exemptions, the most important one being the price of food.

According to administration spokesmen the price freeze would be replaced as fast as possible by specific ceiling prices, industry by industry. Such a procedure could go on forever.

The wage freeze would be wiped out as soon as a flexible wage policy could be compiled, it was announced. The "flexible policy" was considered necessary to permit lagging wages in some industries to come up to a certain standard.

The price order was complex and confusing, especially with respect to farm products and food.

First of all, there was no freeze of any food prices at the farm level.

But on the processing, wholesale, and retail levels, food prices were frozen if the farm prices of those foods were above parity. Thus, beef, veal, pork and lamb prices were frozen.

(Parity is a sliding scale designed to keep farm prices fixed at a relation to the farmer's costs. The law prohibits price ceilings below parity.)

Most farm products at the time of the wage-price freeze were below parity. Poultry and eggs were examples. If and when the farmer's price went up on those things, the wholesaler and retailer could not raise prices to increase their margins. The increase, however, would be automatically passed along all the way to the consumer.

Other things exempt from price controls included communication and publication fields — like newspapers, books, magazines, radio, television and theater admission.

Controls

Price administrator Michael V. DiSalle (right) looks on as Attorney General J. Howard McGrath administers the oath of office to 13 officials who head regional and district offices of the economic stabilization organization. These men will direct the price-wage freeze laws.

AEC Tests

Captain Carroll Tyler, manager of the AEC Santa Fe operations office at Los Alamos, N.M., announced test detonations at the atomic testing range near Las Vegas. Tyler gave no details of the tests. His announcement was a warning to residents of the area that such tests were scheduled.

A-BOMB:

Tests Rock Las Vegas

While most of the world waited with apprehension at the result and announcements of the first atomic explosion in this country in a number of years, residents of Las Vegas, Nevada, 40 miles from the atomic testing range, were irked about the whole business.

The atomic energy commission shrouded its experiments in silence. It was known, however, that three explosions took place. Las Vegas witnesses reported a tremendous white flash in the sky, closely followed by another flash, orange in color and not as bright.

Las Vegas residents reported windows shook, houses trembled and burglar alarms in business establishments were set off.

The last explosion was felt and seen in Boulder City, about 65 miles from the test range.

EUROPE:

Time for Co-operation

In the last few weeks, especially since General Eisenhower made his tour of Europe, there seems to have developed a feeling of mutual co-operation between the United States and our allies.

The reluctance to arm and speed up production that was evident only a few months ago disappeared. Britain has launched a production speed-up and rearmament program. And now France has announced plans to take her place beside the U.S. and Britain.

To further this co-operation, French Premier Rene Pleven arrived in Washington for conferences with President Truman. After a series of meetings it was announced Pleven and Truman were in agreement as to policy in the far east, especially in Korea and Indochina.

Most observers agreed the talks would open the way for greater co-operation among the western nations in the defense of Europe, with much greater participation on the part of France.

CASUALTY LISTS

Nation's Traffic Deaths Top 966,000

Military deaths in all American wars, including Korea, reached a total of 994,000 near the end of January. And it appears likely, should the Korean conflict continue for several more months, that the total could climb well over the 1,000,000 mark.

Americans in every walk of life, from the big cities to the home towns of the nation, shuddered at the thought. But right on the home front there is another casualty list just as startling. At the end of January the 50-year toll of traffic deaths in this country topped 966,000, or 28,000 fewer than the aggregate of all war deaths up to the present time.

In addition, between 29,500,000 and 30,000,000 have been injured since 1900.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Nurse Carol fears she will be blamed for napping when Grandmother Thorndyke dies of what is believed to have been a heart attack. The attack was precipitated by the old woman's learning that the girl whom she had believed to be her granddaughter, Dorinda Thorndyke, was an imposter. Dorinda is being played by Stella Moore, a secretary, who was hired by Mrs. Thorndyke's son, Edward, to perform the masquerade for the sake of Mrs. Thorndyke. As the maid, Carrie, begins stripping the coverings from Mrs. Thorndyke's bed, Dorinda notices lipstick stain on the pillow case—lipstick stain the same color as that Mrs. Thorndyke had worn the night of her death.

CHAPTER IX

"Mean?" Lana's face was all innocence again. "Why, nothing. What could I mean? It's only that Edward is a sucker for feminine influence." She bent over and picked up her magazine.

A few minutes later, Dorinda heard the sound of a car in front of the house, then the opening of the door and Edward's voice in the hall. She sprang to her feet and he and Fay came into the living room. She must speak to him now before she was completely drained of courage.

"Uncle Edward," she said quickly. "I want to talk to you. It—it's important."

Fay stood beside Edward, her hand on his arm. Her beautiful face was serious as befitted the occasion but there was an expression almost of satisfaction in her shining eyes. She raised her brows questioningly.

"Is it necessary, Dorinda? I'm sure Edward doesn't feel like having a discussion about your difficulties just now."

"Please, Fay," Edward murmured. He looked hot and exhausted, his square-jowled face set in grayish pallor. "Can't it wait until after lunch, Dorinda? It's been a trying morning."

Dorinda hesitated. She thought of Carrie upstairs finishing her work, bundling up the used linen for the laundry.

"I won't keep you but a little while," she pleaded.

"Very well then." Edward inclined his head. He led the way across the hall to his study.

Edward lowered himself into a large armchair, his face away from the light. But before Dorinda could speak, a light tap sounded, the door was pushed open and Fay came in carrying a silver tray set with cut-glass decanter and glasses.

Dorinda Tells Edward Of Certain Suspicions

As she gave Edward his glass, she laid her hand upon his shoulder in a caressing gesture.

"Thank you, Fay," he said gratefully. He put his own hand over hers in a fleeting response.

Fay set down her glass, half emptied. "If you must talk to Edward, Dorinda, go ahead. I'll be down for lunch in half an hour." The quiet closing of the door announced her departure.

Alone with Edward, Dorinda was at a loss how to begin. He did not help her but sat staring down into the golden sherry, his lids drooped over his black eyes. The fringe of his lashes was as long and thick as a girl's, she noticed, watching him.

He raised his head at her timid, "Uncle Edward," and she could see the almost physical effort he made to pull himself from the dark depths where his mind had wandered, and focus his attention upon her.

"Just a moment," he murmured. He took a cigarette from a box on the desk.

She waited until he had extinguished his match before she spoke. Afterward, she could not remember what words she had used. She only knew that she had to tell him and she did, stumbling, incoherent, but in the end, making her monstrous suspicions clear. "If someone held the pillow over her face . . the effect on her heart . . ."

"Dorinda," he said, his voice curiously gentle. "We've gone through a bad time, all of us. You've been placed in a peculiar position. I haven't been blind to your doubts, your fears. I can understand that your suspicions might be easily aroused."

"This thing you've suggested—this monstrous thing—I can't tell you how you've hurt me. And your accusation, for it is practically an accusation, has no more foundation than a smear of lipstick."

"Don't say that, Uncle Edward," Dorinda protested. "I never meant to accuse anyone of anything. It's because I knew you loved your mother I felt you had to know. I couldn't keep a thing like that to myself. I wouldn't dare."

He leaned toward her and laid his hand upon her knee.

"But, don't you see, Dorinda, that you're accusing someone—someone in this house? For no outsider could have entered in the night.

"The servants? Carol? What motive could any of them have? I believe I did mention to Carol that my mother might have remembered her in her will. But, at the best, it will be only a comparatively small amount and only a possibility at that. It's an absurd supposition.

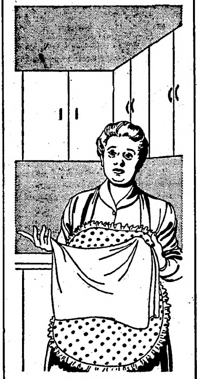
"Harriet or Lana? For what reason? They would only be ousting themselves out of the home they've insinuated themselves into. For. I think they both realize I'll never tolerate their staying here indefinitely.

"Fay? I don't need to tell you that Fay's interests coincide with mine. And, mark this, child, so far as finances are concerned, I was infinitely better off financially with my mother living than I will be now. You look surprised but I can assure you I am telling you the truth."

"I know." Dorinda swallowed. "I'm sorry if I've distressed you. I suppose I have been silly. But if—if anything had been wrong, I couldn't keep it to myself."

"Don't think I misunderstand, my dear. And now let's try to forget it, shall we? Please don't say to anyone else what you've said to me."

She took Randy down to the sand that afternoon. Cleve did not come but at least she was away from the house and in the impersonal company of the sea and wind.



Carrie had just finished washing the luncheon dishes.

That night, in the unguarded moments before sleep, the whole troubled week seemed to pass before her in review, a motion-picture fantasy cast upon the screen of her consciousness.

Morning came. Saturday and Sunday dragged by. Mrs. Thorndyke's funeral was on the Monday following her death. Dorinda had only one black dress, a simply cut black linen from which she removed the leaf-green buttons and belt. At two o'clock she joined the family in the big black sedan which waited before the house and they drove to Trentville.

Dorinda Plans Lazy Afternoon on Beach

The small funeral chapel was crowded with people. Practically everyone who lived in or near the little town was present. The odor of flowers was almost overpowering.

Cleve had sent a blanket of white roses. He had brought his mother to call at Thorndyke House the day before. Dorinda had liked Mrs. Adams on sight. She was a feminine replica of Cleve, older, but with eyes just as blue, her lustrous black hair untouched by white.

The sun was sucking up the mist which had lingered till past midday when they came to their journey's end. The piled-up flowers about the open grave made a mosaic of brilliant color.

"Ashes to ashes. Dust to dust." It was over. They were turning home again, leaving Grandmother alone in the warm and kindly earth.

The car drew up in front of Thorndyke House again and the four women got out, leaving Edward to take the car on around to the garage. There was no chauffeur employed in this household. Edward had an affection for his expensive cars, as he had for all his possessions, and preferred to pilot them himself.

Inside, Dorinda ran up the stairs, heading for the sanctuary of her room. Fay followed her and, just as Dorinda reached her door, stopped her with a hand upon her arm.

"I'm glad you're not crying, Dorinda." The girl caught the note of approval, unusual in Fay's voice. "There's no use in trying to grieve for someone who meant nothing to you. As for me, I'm no hypocrite. I don't pretend to be sorry. Now," and for the first time since Dorinda had known her, Fay gave the girl a smile which contained real warmth, "as soon as the conventions permit, Edward and I will be married. There's no obstacle in our way now!"

On Tuesday morning, the day after the funeral, Fay remarked at the breakfast table that she would like to go away for the day.

"Of course, we can't attend the theater or anything of that sort, Edward, but suppose you and I drive up to Monterey for dinner. It will do us both good to be away from the house. We've been cooped up here for so long."

"I know I'm not going to stick around." Lana poured a liberal amount of cream over her cereal. "And I'm going to take Mother down to the Red Cross workrooms. She might as well be rolling bandages, or whatever they do there, for the British, as stewing about the house."

"Oh, Lana, I don't believe—" Harriet's face puckered in protest.

"Now, Mother, I'm sick of hearing you say how lonesome you are whenever I'm away. The same song day after day. You're going if I have to tie you up and deliver you at the door. You can't tell, maybe you'll like it."

Edward folded his newspaper carefully and laid it down. "That isn't a bad idea, Fay. I think perhaps I would feel better for a change of scene." He stirred sugar into the fresh coffee Fay had just poured for him. "Have you and Dorinda decided just when you want to go?"

Two small perpendicular creases marred the smoothness of Fay's forehead and Dorinda said quickly, "Oh, I'm not going, Uncle Edward. I'm planning to take Randy and spend the afternoon down on the beach."

"I don't think I want to leave you here alone, Dorinda."

"Why, I won't be alone. Greer and Carrie will both be here. And Carol."

Carrie Fixes Lunch For Dorinda, Randy

"Carol is planning on going to Los Angeles today and staying overnight." Fay brushed her lips lightly with her napkin and pushed back her chair. "She spoke to me about it just before I came downstairs this morning and I told her we would take her to the train if we decided to go out ourselves. But, as you say, Greer and Carrie will both be here. You won't be left alone."

Shortly after eleven o'clock, Edward and Fay in the big black sedan, with Carol in the back seat, drove away. Dorinda felt a little disappointed at Carol's departure.

Lana and her mother departed immediately after an early lunch. Well, she wouldn't be lonely, Dorinda thought. She'd take a book with her down to her favorite nook and she'd have Randy. But Lana's car had hardly disappeared down the driveway when Greer called Dorinda to the telephone.

"Hello, Rinda!" Cleve's voice came to her over the wire. "How are you planning to spend the afternoon?"

"Cleve!" She did not attempt to hide her delight. "I'm all alone here. And I was planning to take Randy down to the beach and soak in a little sunshine."

"Good. We seem to be thinking along similar lines. It's warm out, the warmest day we've had this year. How about putting on our bathing suits and trying out the Pacific Ocean?"

"I think it would be grand. Why, I've never been in—it didn't occur to me it would be warm enough. Oh, Cleve, it'll be fun!"

"Okay. Then I'll meet you down on your beach in half an hour. Have your suit on and we'll see what kind of a water baby you are."

She pushed open the swinging door at the end of the hall and went out into the kitchen.

Carrie, spotless in blue house dress and print apron, had just finished washing the luncheon dishes. She set two polished glasses on a high shelf and shut the cupboard door before she turned to face Dorinda.

Dorinda felt a tremor of discomfort. But she tried to make her voice natural as she said, "Carrie, I'm going down to the beach for the rest of the afternoon. If you'll fix some sandwiches and cookies—oh, whatever you have — and a thermos of coffee, I won't need any dinner tonight. Cleve Adams is meeting me and we'll picnic on the sand."

"Swell. If you'll get it ready, Carrie, I'll take it down with me after I've changed into my bathing suit."

"Mr. Greer can bring it down. Or I could myself." Carrie pulled open a drawer, took out paper napkins. "I'll fix you a nice lunch, Miss." She opened the door of the icebox. "I'm glad you ain't going to be down there by yourself."

"I am, too. But even if I were alone, there'd be nothing to be afraid of."

"Maybe not. But kind'a funny things happen sometimes. Carrie still stood in front of the opened icebox, her back to Dorinda. "It was a nice funeral, wasn't it, Miss?"

"Yes—yes, Carrie. It was a nice funeral." Dorinda went out of the kitchen with a queer sense of shortness of breath.

Big Fellows

Superman of comic-strip fame has plenty of competition in American folklore, which is filled with tall tales of mighty men. Among them is Big Paul Bunyan, hero of the American lumberjacks. Bunyan is described as being so enormous as a baby, his mother had to use "the wheels off of a wheelbarrow as buttons for his jacket."

Suez and Wheat

The Suez Canal owes its construction to wheat. It was built so that the journey of wheat from India to England would be greatly reduced, the American Bakers Association reported.

Barefoot Cobbler

John Greenleaf Whittier, who became famous for his poem, "The Barefoot Boy," once worked as a shoemaker's apprentice! The young Quaker poet put himself through school by making shoes and slippers for fine New England ladies.

Bakery Workers

More than 450,000 persons are directly employed in the baking industry, more than in any other phase of the food industry.

Baking Parties

In rural Greece, loaves of bread for engagement parties are kneaded in public with friends and relatives tossing coins into the dough so that the engaged couple can afford a large wedding.

Cereal Consumption

The average American obtains between 28 and 30 per cent of both the food energy and protein of his diet by direct consumption of cereal products.

Mother of Our First President

THE girl who was to become the mother of George Washington was something of a belle in her native colony, Virginia. Mary Ball, descended from a good English family, was called "the rose of Epping Forest" in her girlhood, Epping Forest being the name of the Ball homestead. Orphaned early, she had as her guardian George Eskridge, a wealthy Virginia planter.

At twenty-two, Mary Ball married (on March 6, 1730) Augustine Washington, then a widower with two little boys. Her first child she named George after her old family friend. Five other children were born of this marriage, four of whom survived. When Augustine Washington died, she was left with a brood of youngsters to care for. George was then only eleven. Fortunately, however, states a writer in the Indianapolis News, the husband had provided for them amply.

George Washington was still a young boy when he became possessed of a great desire to be a midshipman. His mother had been half-hearted about this plan at all times, but finally (so the story goes) when his sea-chest was being carried down to the wharf by a porter, she refused to let him go. He accepted her decision with good grace, and devoted himself to surveying instead. His activities in the next years often took him far away from her and gradually prepared him for the great role he was to play in American history.

Mary Ball Washington was sixty-eight when the revolution began. Since communication was then so primitive, she often did not know for months at a time whether her son was alive or dead. Yet she maintained outward calm and courage. One of her sayings was, "The mothers and wives of brave men must be brave women." The members of her household knew, though, that every day she went off by herself with her Bible to a quiet spot called Meditation Rock.

Mary Ball at 22, When She Wed Augustine Washington.

At last Cornwallis surrendered in 1781 and the revolution was won. Ever mindful of his mother's anxiety for him, Washington sent off a courier at once to bear her the news.

Mary Ball Washington lived to be over eighty, mentally keen and unfailingly cheerful. She died in 1789, the year her son was elected first President of the United States.

HOW WOULD YOU DEFINE A "FAIR" TAX?

QUICK PICTURE OF TAXES PAID BY MINNESOTA INDUSTRIES

MOST Minnesota industries pay a state corporate income tax at a rate of... 6.3% (After deducting federal income tax)

ONE Minnesota industry—iron ore—pays an occupation and royalty tax (a special production tax) at a rate of... 12% (Without right to deduct federal income tax)

THIS present ore tax—with no exemption for federal income tax (47%)—is actually equal to a net income tax rate of... (Figure it out for yourself!) 22.6%

THAT'S NOT ALL. The iron ore industry also pays property taxes at a much higher assessment rate than other industries (50% of full and true value, vs. 33⅓% to 40% on industrial property).

MOST MINNESOTANS, surveys show, believe that a "fair" tax on the iron ore industry of this state would be a tax at about the same rate other industries pay. It isn't a low rate—it is one of the highest corporate income taxes in the nation. But note, in the chart at left, how much higher iron ore taxes are. Then consider this fact: a bill now before the legislature would boost the present lofty ore tax rate by another 33⅓%! Would that fit your definition of a "fair" tax?

PUNISH 'EM?

Grimsrud

"To tax iron mining more severely than the rest of us," writes Editor Alton T. Grimsrud of the Zumbrota News, "is one way to punish or control an industry. Punishing or penalizing an industry gives us what industrial spokesmen call an 'unhealthy climate' for industry, reflected not only in taxes but in employee morale and plans of industrial leaders for the future. It would be as if everyone were to make up his mind against the farming industry . . ."

WHY ARE FAIR ORE TAXES IMPORTANT?

—BECAUSE Minnesota's iron ore industry must rely on low-grade and taconite ores as the high-grades run out;

—BECAUSE processing these leaner ores is a manufacturing operation calling for hundreds of millions to be invested in great "ore factories";

—BECAUSE despite higher costs, Minnesota's ore must be priced low enough to compete with ores of other areas;

—BECAUSE more ore factories can be built . . . more jobs created . . . if Minnesota's ore industry is taxed as fairly as other industries.

A fair deal for Minnesota's iron ore means a good deal for you

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

Here's a picture of an Otter Tail Power Company pole up near Cass Lake after it was struck by lightning last September. When Henry Berquist, local superintendent, sent in the picture he wrote: "Looks like this might be one of Paul Bunyan's toothpicks."

Maybe so. All I could think of was the folks that had to do without lights and power while the damage was being repaired — and I felt like I wanted to crawl off and hide in an empty fuse box somewhere.

Hope it's just my imagination, but I always figure a lot of folks just think I took the day off when there's a power failure. Either that, or I'm getting too old. Truth of the matter is, I've never been more active or more healthy. The bad luck I sometimes have is the same kind of bad luck that makes a brand new tire go flat on a brand new car.

Like down at LaMoure last month, [illegible]king an emergency trip to open the road for an ambulance, a county snow plow struck an Otter Tail pole. I was doing my "high wire" act as usual when . . . ZOOM!

Well, inside of 90 minutes, thanks to fast work in rough weather by an Otter Tail crew, I was back at work again. The point of the story is that it's impossible to predict WHERE or WHEN trouble will occur — because you never know what's going to cause it.

The Otter Tail folks guard against trouble as much as possible. (But you never know about the "outages" that DON'T happen!) For instance, here's a picture of the switch rack at the Ortonville plant, with Vern Tupper (Rugby District crew foreman) at work. Purpose of the switch rack is to provide a way of SWITCHING power from one line to another in case of trouble on one of the lines coming out of the plant.

I'm PLUGGIN' for you . . . all the time. All you have to do is PLUG IN for me — I'm REDDY!

Start All Over
When paint-and-varnish remover have been used on a surface to remove the old coating entirely, the surface must then be cleaned thoroughly with turpentine, mineral spirits or wax-remover and subsequently treated as a previously uncoated surface.

Avoid Brooder Fires
Check over the heating facilities and electric equipment in the brooder houses for any defects which might result in fires. So-called accidental fires often could have been prevented by making proper repairs long before the fire broke out.

Marshall County State Bank Has New FDIC Certificate

Mr. Geo. Fricker. Cashier of the Marshall County, today announced, receipt from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Washington, D. C. of a new certificate of membership giving effect to the recent increase in insurance coverage to $10,000. The Marshall County State Bank has been a member of FDIC since 1935.

Mr. Fricker pointed out that this insurance does not cost depositors of the bank a single penny. The surplus of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation which now exceeds $1,300,000,000, in addition to all deposit insurance losses and operating expenses of the Corporation has been paid in by the 13,650 insured banks of the Nation in the form of annual assessments based on their total deposits.

"Under the leadership of its Chairman, Maple T. Harl, and his predecessors," Mr. Fricker said, "the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has made a great contribution to the soundness and solvency of our banking system and to the safety and security of bank depositors. It has been seven years since any depositor of an insured bank suffered a loss, a new record for depositor safety in this Nation.

"This is in sharp contrast even to the synthetically prosperous days of early 1929 when the State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association reported with pride that: "All told there were 14 States in which there were no bank failures at all reported in the 1928 period, nine of these also having a clean record in this respect for two or more years.

A letter from FDIC Chairman Harl accompanied the certificate. It read in part:

"This certificate can be displayed in your banking rooms with pride in the accomplishments of a Corporation in which you and 13,600 other banking institutions are banded together for the protection of your depositors' funds.

"Each bank can take a great great share of the credit for the fact that nearly seven years have passed since an insured bank was placed in receivership.

Improved bank management coupled with diligent bank supervision, plus Federal deposit insurance have brought to our nation an era free from the specter of losses to depositors and eliminated the dread of and the devasting results from bank runs.

"This Corporation has made an outstanding contribution to this marvelous record, furthermore, has accumulated a surplus of nearly one and a half billion dollars as additional protection against any and all future contingencies which might in any way affect the solvency and stability of a dual banking system. In addition thereto, recent legislation enacted at the request of the Directors of this Corporation has materially simplified the assessment reporting procedure for all insured banks, likewise has provided a substantial reduction in the amount of their anuual assessment outlay.

We are proud of the accomplishments and achievements of the American banking system, and by the same token we hope that you take justifiable pride in the record achieved by your Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation since its inception," Mr. Harl's letter concluded.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Dorinda LaCroix reports to Edward Thorndyke her fears that his mother, who supposedly died of a heart attack, might have been suffocated by someone holding her face against a pillow. Dorinda is really Stella Moore, employed by Edward to pose as the dead Dorinda to save his mother, who was Dorinda's grandmother, from learning the real Dorinda is dead. Edward scoffs at her suspicions. The family attends Grandmother Thorndyke's funeral, and the next day Dorinda plans an afternoon at the beach with Cleve Adams. Carrie fixes a lunch for the pair and Dorinda is looking forward with pleasant expectations to the brief holiday and a few hours alone with Cleve.

CHAPTER X

She ran upstairs. She would not look at Grandmother's closed door beyond which lay her quiet room, dim and in order, the crumpled linen taken away. By now, she knew, the white sheets and pillow cases had been swirled in snowy suds, and, blowing on the line beyond the kitchen garden, been cleansed by the sun and wind of any lingering vestiges of stain. The traces of lipstick were gone. Her doubts, too, were gone. Or so she tried to believe.

Just as she reached the foot of the stairs, the doorbell chimed. Looking past Greer as he opened the front door, she saw Anne silhouetted against the bright outdoors, and ran forward to greet her.

"Anne, I'm so glad to see you." Dorinda caught Anne's hands in hers, her face lighting in welcome. "It's the first time you ever came to see me."

Anne smiled. Her face, beneath her small black hat, looked flushed and warm. "I know, Dorinda. But I had to come today. I closed the library this afternoon. I wanted to tell you how sorry I am about what has happened."

Dorinda nodded soberly. "About Grandmother, yes."

Anne was eying Dorinda's white robe. "You're going bathing? Oh, I wish I'd known. I would have brought my own suit. I've been looking forward to the day when it would be warm enough. It seems ages since I've been in the surf."

"I'll lend you one, Anne. We're about the same size. Cleve Adams is waiting down on our beach—you know him? It'll be super having you with us."

She caught Anne's hand and pulled her toward the stairway. "I can hardly wait to get in the water. Hurry, Anne."

"What a cute outfit. And brand new. I feel guilty wearing it."

Dorinda Takes Anne With Her to Beach

"You look gorgeous." Dorinda found another robe in the closet and threw it at Anne, who stood in front of the mirror pulling out hairpins, so that her hair escaped from its smooth roll about her head and fell in a cascade of pale golden-brown waves about her shoulders.

They went out the side door and turned back toward the shoreline the sun hot against their shoulders. Just before they descended the wooden steps, Dorinda sat down on the low boulder wall that ran along the edge of the rise, and looked down at the beach.

Yes, Cleve was already there, striding up and down the sand and, as she watched, Randy, who had run down the steps without waiting for them, caught up with him and leaped against him, barking with delight.

"You know Anne, don't you, Cleve?"

"Sure, she's another one of the kids I went to school with. Only, due to my advanced age, I was a couple of grades above her. Don't you know there are no strangers in Trentville, Dorinda? How come you're not at the library, Anne?"

"Oh, I thought I deserved a day off."

"You picked a good one."

At three o'clock, Carrie came down the wooden steps stiffly and carefully, her arms clasped about a big cardboard box. She plodded across the sand to where the three of them had flung themselves down to rest and dry.

"Here's the lunch," she said, and set the box down beside them. Dorinda saw that her gaunt face was crumpled in distress, her eyelids reddened.

"Oh, Miss Dorinda," she quavered, "something awful's happened."

Her fingers plucked at the front of the blue house dress. "I just had a telephone call from Westport. That's where my boy lives—he's had an accident and they phoned from the hospital. I got to go up there, I just got to."

Dorinda sprang to her feet. "Why, of course, Carrie, you must go. Oh, I'm so sorry. But how can you get there? There's no train tonight—"

"No, but Mr. Greer says if you can spare me, he can drive me up in the roadster. I wouldn't leave you for anything else, Miss, but I just have to go. He's the only thing I've got. And you'll have company. You won't be alone."

"You mustn't mind me, Carrie. I'll be all right. Run along and don't worry. I wish I could do something to help."

"Thank you, Miss. I'm hoping it won't be so bad. I'll come back as soon as I can." She started off across the sand.

Randy, who had curled up on Dorinda's robe, jumped up and thrust his cold nose against her hand. "Darling pup," she said, and rubbed his brown ears, "are we staying quiet too long? Do you want someone to play with you?"

She hunted for the pocket of her robe. "I brought your ball with me. Come on, we'll have a game."

She threw the ball down the beach, watching Randy gallop after it, scattering the gulls and the tiny sandpipers that followed the receding waves.

Cleve, inspecting her critically, laughed. "You throw just like a girl," he said. "Come on, put some power behind it. Give Randy a run for his money."

"He's satisfied. Why do you object?" Dorinda retorted, but she put all her strength behind her next effort and the ball described a long curve through the air and disappeared behind the end of the bank which shut in the cove. The little dog, the ball out of sight, looked at Dorinda, his tail wagging questioningly.

"Now, see what you made me do?" Dorinda said crossly. "If your ball's lost, Randy, don't blame me."

Boulder From Cliff Top Crushes Out Anne's Life

"Oh, my fault, of course. I'll go get it." Cleve pulled himself up from the sand. "You women never give a man a moment's peace. Always something to do. I believe you threw the ball around the point on purpose."

"Of course, you need the exercise, don't you?" There was a smile on her lips and her eyes were tender as she watched him round the projecting bank.

He did not come back at once and then she heard him call, "Come on here, girls. I've found a starfish."

Anne got up from the sand and stretched lazily. "You go, Dorinda. I've seen plenty of starfish." She pulled off her robe and hung it over her arm. "I'm going to rest here on your special seat for awhile. I feel cramped from sitting tailor-fashion on the ground."

"Okay. Back in a minute."

She did not know how long she stayed away from Anne, five minutes, ten, it might have been as much as fifteen. She and Cleve examined the starfish, they peered into the clear pools of water caught among the rocks along the stretch of sand beyond the cove, they picked up a shell or two.

She never knew whether she had heard something or whether the cold finger of premonition touched her. For Anne did not cry out until Dorinda had come running around the point.

There was some vague movement at the top of the bank, a flash of yellow across her eyes, and a big boulder from the stone wall came hurtling down the slope of the bluff directly toward Anne, who, her frightened face upturned, crouched on the slab of black rock.

Then all Dorinda could see was a slender figure sprawled flat on the sand and a mass of fair hair spread fanwise, golden-brown hair fast turning crimson, dyed by a spreading flood of scarlet. All she could hear was her own voice, screaming, screaming, seemingly unable to stop.

Cleve came running around the end of the cove, his hair tumbled by the wind. Dorinda flung herself against him, her fingers clutching at him, her face pressing against his breast. He put his arms about her and then she felt the tension which stiffened him. She knew he was looking over her head at Anne, quiet on the sand. At the blood-stained boulder come to rest.

"It came down the bank—it hit her." Her voice was only a thread of sound.

He loosened her fingers gently. "Don't look, Dorinda."

But she did look. She stood there, numb, staring, as he bent over the body. He touched Anne's wrist, he lifted the fan of her hair. Then he came back to Dorinda, standing in front of her so that she could not see beyond him. He rubbed his fingers on his trunks. He looked sick.

"Dorinda," he said, "listen, Dorinda." He scanned her white face anxiously. "I'm afraid she's dead. She couldn't be alive with—" He bit his lip. "I'll stay here. You go up to the house and telephone for the doctor. Can you do that? You won't faint?"

She swallowed. She couldn't see Anne now. Just Cleve's blue eyes looking at her. "Yes, I can go." She was surprised at the steadiness of her own voice. She went across the sand and up the wooden steps without looking back. But she did see the big gap in the boulder wall at the top of the bluff.

There was no one in sight. Garden, driveway, lawn, all were deserted. She couldn't even hear a car on the road beyond the green turf. The whole place seemed caught in a heavy brooding silence. And the house, too. The house was deserted.

She had called Dr. Evans once for Grandmother and she remembered the number. He hadn't left his office yet and answered the phone quickly.

Dr. Evans Decides To Call in Sheriff

She told him swiftly, trying to select her words so that he would understand, so that she wouldn't have to go over it more than once.

Dr. Evans was there almost at once. She heard the noise of his travel-stained roadster and then a moment later he turned in at the driveway and stopped just beyond the red brick steps. He jumped out, black bag in hand, and hurried to her.

Dorinda pointed. "She's down there. On the beach. I can't go down again."

"No, no, you needn't go. But you mustn't stay here in that wet bathing suit. Why, you're shivering. You'd better go in the house and get dressed."

She shook her head. "No, I'll wait here. Go on down to Anne. Don't worry about me. Hurry!"

He looked at her in perplexity. "Get in my car then. There's a robe there. Wrap it around you." He hurried off, without waiting to see if she followed his advice.

But she did as he said. She climbed into his car and found the folded robe on the back of the seat.

It was forever before Dr. Evans came back. She kept saying to herself, "Anne isn't dead! She isn't dead!" If she could make herself believe it, it would be true. Yet all the time, she knew Anne was dead. "She couldn't be alive—" she put her hand over her ears as if she could shut out the sound of Cleve's voice saying the words over and over.

And then Dr. Evans was there, standing beside the roadster looking at her. She didn't ask him about Anne. She glanced at him just once, and knew the answer without asking the question.

Instead, she said, "Where's Cleve?"

Dr. Evans' face wasn't pink now. "Cleve's still down there," he told her. "I brought the pup back with me."

He had Randy under one arm, but he loosened his hold now and put him in Dorinda's lap. "I'm going to call the sheriff's office."

"But it was an accident, wasn't it?"

"The sheriff takes charge in cases of accidental death." He looked at her keenly. "I'm going in to telephone, Dorinda. You'd better come in with me."

Dr. Evans was very patient with her. He didn't ask her why she was afraid. Perhaps he thought it was only natural after what had happened. Once she tried to tell him about the footsteps she'd heard, or thought she'd heard, but he only shook his head at her.

"You're upset, Dorinda. Why don't you lie down for a while?"

So they went downstairs together and waited in the empty living room. He asked her then where Edward and Fay were, and how it happened that Lana and Harriet and the servants were away.

He said, "Poor child, you've had an ordeal. First your grandmother. And now this." He moved uneasily and looked at his watch. "The sheriff should be here by now."

Household Hints

When fat flares up on the stove, quickly throw a handful of salt on it. If no salt is handy, clap a magazine or newspaper over the flame. Or, use an empty pot as a snuffer. In any case do not throw water on the flames. It's not likely to extinguish the fire, and there's a good chance it will splash some of the flaming grease onto you.

To prevent grease from sputtering excessively, sprinkle a little salt or flour in the pan before the grease is added. If it's too late for such a preventive measure, turn a colander upside down over the frying pan. This will stop the flying grease, but will still allow air to come in contact with what's cooking.

If you're wearing shorts around the kitchen, especially during canning season, protect yourself from flying and spattering hot stuff by pinning a turkish towel to your waist so it will hang down in front of your bare legs.

Sliced fingers can be prevented when you pare vegetables if you slap a piece of adhesive tape on your thumb before you start.

A variation of the old colonial custom of spicing bedsheets can be worked in your linen closet and linen drawers by purchasing quantities of toilet soap in advance of your needs and storing it unwrapped among the linens. White, [illegible]-scented soaps go well in the [illegible] and master's shirts and handkerchiefs; green, pine-scented cakes are suggested for bed linens and towels.

Onions are probably the most dangerous vegetable to slice thin because they have a way of slipping out of the knife's way and leaving your fingers there to take the rap. Avoid this by setting the onion on a flat metal grater while you slice it. The grater won't allow the onion to slip out from under at the crucial moment.

Effective Cough Syrup, Home-Mixed for Extra Economy
Saves Big Dollars. No Cooking.
This splendid recipe is used by millions because it makes such an effective medicine for coughs due to colds. It's so easy to mix—a child could do it.
From any druggist get 2½ ounces of Pinex, a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its soothing effect on throat and bronchial irritations.
Then make a syrup with two cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.
Put the Pinex into a pint bottle and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of cough medicine, very effective and quick-acting, and you get about four times as much for your money. It never spoils, and children love its pleasant taste.
This cough syrup takes hold of coughs, giving quick relief. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, helps clear air passages. Money refunded if Pinex doesn't please.

DO YOU HATE CHANGE of LIFE? and HOT FLUSHES?
Do you suffer from hot flushes, nervous tension, upset emotions due to functional 'change of life' (38-52 years)—that period when fertility ebbs away, when embarrassing symptoms of this nature may betray your age?
Then start taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms. No other medicine of this type for women has such a long record of success. Taken regularly, Pinkham's Compound helps build up resistance against this annoying middle-age distress. Truly the woman's friend!
Note: Or you may prefer Lydia E. Pinkham's TABLETS with added iron. Any drugstore.

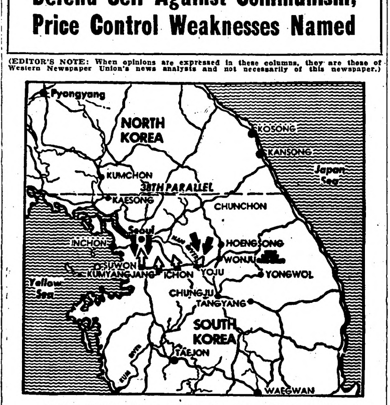
Eisenhower Reports Europe Will Defend Self Against Communism; Price Control Weaknesses Named

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



United Nations forces continued a slow advance northward against North Korean and Chinese forces with units of U.N. troops within a short distance of Seoul. Most of the activity was in the west below the capital of South Korea. There were reports of disease among Communist troops and numerous casualties.

EUROPE:

The Picture Clears

Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, a man who commands the respect of more Americans today than any other, cleared the fog from the European picture in his recent report to congress on his whirlwind tour of the democratic nations.

Since the United States made it clear that the defense of western Europe was of first importance and that we intended to build a united front against communism, the average American has been beset with doubts and fears. The outstanding doubt, fed by the constant bickering and disagreements of national leaders, was that western Europe did not have the will and determination to build a defense; that perhaps the greatest share of the burden would fall upon the United States.

Eisenhower, however, cleared the picture. He told the lawmakers again and again there has been a great rejuvenation of spirit in Soviet-shadowed Europe. To some his report sounded like a new battle cry for freedom.

There was another note of hope in his message. American troops are needed abroad, but American arms are needed more. America's allies in the North Atlantic treaty are ready to take their part and "we are going to build for ourselves a secure wall of peace."

It was understandable that the success of Eisenhower's tour can be attributed largely to the faith western Europe has in the general as a man and a leader.

CONTROLS:

Disagreeable Second Look

It was generally agreed that the great majority of the American people were in favor of wage and price controls. After a second look at the ones recently enacted, the average American was not too happy. In fact, a good many of them were shocked and angry.

The main worry of the people in the home towns of the nation was the price of food. A second look at the new price law revealed that many foods could jump five to 200 per cent in price without running afoul of the law.

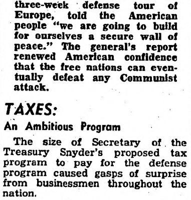
Potatoes, for instance, could advance 80 per cent before reaching the "magic figure." Butter and milk could go 10 per cent higher, chickens 25 per cent, eggs 21 per cent, turkeys 12 per cent, oranges 200 per cent, lemons 30 per cent, and apples 30 per cent. Prices could even go higher on bread and baked goods.

On top of this the government began to ease its wage freeze in some industries, notably the coal industry.

The people on main street were beginning to ask themselves if the legislators were playing them for suckers. They were reminding themselves that in a democracy what is good for one group is good for another.

The answer to the wage-price situation is not simple. But a quick re-examination of the situation is mandatory.

Commander



Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, European supreme commander, reporting to the nation on his three-week defense tour of Europe, told the American people "we are going to build for ourselves a secure wall of peace." The general's report renewed American confidence that the free nations can eventually defeat any Communist attack.

TAXES:

An Ambitious Program

The size of Secretary of the Treasury Snyder's proposed tax program to pay for the defense program caused gasps of surprise from businessmen throughout the nation.

Snyder called the program "rather rugged" and added it was the governments first step in a plan to get at least 16.5 billion dollars more revenue. The plan called for 20 per cent more income taxes from the little fellow, increases in corporate income taxes, and greatly increased levies on new automobiles, liquors, beer, cigarettes, radios, refrigerators, and many other consumer items.

To put it mildly, it was an ambitious tax program. It did not appear that congress would act quickly in the matter, although the administration requested speed. Also, the most optimistic administration planners did not think the program would be adopted without considerable revision and possible slashes.

Of the total, $3.6 billion would be contributed by individual income tax payers. As an example of how the new tax would work in the lower income groups, a married person with two dependents and a net income of $3,000 now pays $120 federal tax, or 4 per cent of his income. The proposed rates would increase his tax liability to $144, or 4.8 per cent of his income.

It sounds small when you speak of a rate rise from 4 to 4.8 per cent. But if you look at the tax figures alone, a jump from $120 to $144 is a 20 per cent increase and presents another picture.

Among other proposed taxes, automobiles would be subject to 20 per cent instead of 10, radios, television sets, and various other electrical household appliances would be taxed 25 per cent instead of 10.

WORLD RELIEF

Church Group Launches Relief Plan

Nineteen major Protestant and Orthodox church groups, representing virtually all of the Protestantism in America, recently formed the National Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Two weeks ago the newly formed council inaugurated its first major service project—a nationwide appeal for funds for overseas relief, reconstruction and service to refugees and displaced persons through the world. The project began Sunday, February 11, but the period of emphasis will be through Easter Sunday, March 25.

Funds collected will be used for the relief of the 50 to 70 million persons who are war refugees today, and for the re-location of some 30 million displaced persons of World War II.

WORKSHOP PATTERN SERVICE
Drawer 10
Bedford Hills, New York

When you need extra closet and drawer space, let an old attic trunk take care of it for you. Clean the trunk with steel wool, soap and water, spruce it up with two coats of enamel to match the color scheme of the bedroom, garnish with decal transfers from the five-and-ten, and find a place for the trunk in the room that needs the closet space. It's particularly handy for storing the baby's woolens and extra blankets and such; saves a lot of running up to the attic for things.

Disagreement

A district attorney objected to a lawyer calling the State's evidence "tainted testimony." His objection was sustained by the judge, before whom the case is being tried. "The testimony isn't tainted," he declared.

"'Tis," replied the lawyer.

"Tain't," voiced the judge.

Top-Dressing Alfalfa After First Cutting Adds Life to Stand

TOP-DRESSING alfalfa after the first cutting with phosphate and potash fertilizer will prolong the life of the alfalfa stand, promote heavier growth the rest of the season and help the legume do a better soil-building job, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

Less time will be needed for the plants to push out new growth. Roots will have a better chance to store up reserves of high energy starches and sugars.

Well fed legumes can make fuller use of soil moisture and of the carbon, oxygen and other nutrients taken from the air. The tap roots of alfalfa and sweet clover can probe deeper into the soil. The phosphate and potash they carry will be distributed from the surface on down to the moist soil zone below.

When these legumes are turned under they rot quickly to form humus, because they are packed with nutrients needed by soil bacteria to break down organic matter. As this organic matter decomposes, it improves soil structure and releases plant nutrients to feed crops that follow.

Yearly phosphate-potash top-dressing keeps 5-year-old alfalfa stand thick and productive.

Second crop alfalfa should be allowed to establish a strong new top growth before pasturing or cutting for hay. Agronomists recommend a no pasturing policy after early September. This will enable the alfalfa plants to pack their roots with plant food reserves to carry them safely through the winter and spur good growth the following spring.

Sometimes Good Intentions Aren't Enough

That fire at the Griffin place didn't do much damage last week, but Volunteer Chief Murphy was pretty angry about it. Spoke to some of us over dinner and a bottle of beer.

"Griffin's farm is a good mile from town," he said. "And by the time we'd dodged all the people on the highway who were going to watch, we hadn't a minute to waste.

"Then blamed if those sightseers hadn't parked cars right in Griffin's driveway and there was a mob of people milling around the house—just gawking. Joe, tell folks a fire's no sideshow. Ask 'em to think of the other fellow!"

From where I sit, some of us need to be reminded occasionally that even though our intentions are good we may be unfairly interfering. Whether it's blocking the right-of-way of fire equipment or criticizing a person's right to enjoy a temperate glass of beer now and then—the American Way is to give way, and give the other fellow his fair "share of the road!"

Minnesota Farmers Receive Millions for... Malting Barley

Minnesota is one of the leading states in the United States in the production of the world's finest malting barley. During 1950 Minnesota farmers sold an estimated 27,700,500 bushels of malting barley at an approximate average price of $1.50 per bushel at the Minneapolis Terminal. This equaled $41,550,750. This barley was raised on 952,000 acres of Minnesota land. Minnesota Farmers receive a handsome premium for malting barley—for instance, in January, 1950, the premium was 47 cents a bushel.

In producing a barrel of beer, close to a bushel of barley malt and more than 9 pounds of corn are used. Every year Minnesota Breweries contribute substantially to the maintenance of the premium price paid for malting barley, which puts millions of extra dollars in the pockets of Minnesota Farmers.

It is proposed that the State Excise Tax on 3.2 beer be raised to $3.30 per barrel, an increase of 200 per cent, but few people realize the tax load that beer now carries. On each barrel of 3.2 beer there is a Federal Tax of $8.00 and a State Tax of $1.10. Other leading beer producing states encourage the production of beer with low state taxes; for instance, in Wisconsin the State Tax is $1.00 a barrel; in Missouri and California the tax on beer is only 62c a barrel.

Every one is willing to pay his fair share of taxes—that's the American Way. But excessive taxes on beer impose a discriminatory sales tax on this product which is consumed so largely by the masses.

Is it wise to discourage Minnesota's brewing industry by adding 200 per cent to the State Excise Tax on 3.2 beer? Is it fair to impose excessive taxes on beer, of which the lower and middle income groups are the greatest consumers?

HERE'S WHAT COFFEE WOULD COST TODAY!

Coffee would cost just 16c a pound today ... if the price had dropped in the last ten years like the cost of electricity. While other prices have soared, electricity now actually costs LESS than ever before.

True, your electric bill may be higher — but only because the average household uses 68% MORE electricity than ten years ago. The unit cost of private power has DECREASED more than 16% over that period.*

We're proud of the record of private power companies over the nation ... proud of the fact that we can say with all sincerity that your tax-paying private power company brings you the "best buy in the family budget!"

"FARMERS GAIN TWO WAYS ... through LAND O' LAKES"

... says JOHN BOLLUYT, Hancock (Minn.) dairyman

"By bringing us farmers together in our own organization, LAND O'LAKES has helped us two ways," says Mr. Bolluyt, an owner-patron of the Hancock Cooperative Creamery Co. "We gain a new advantage in marketing through LAND O'LAKES ... and another in buying feeds, seeds and some of the equipment we use on our dairy farms. And at a LAND O'LAKES creamery—because we own it ourselves—we know we're going to get a square deal, every time. Our creamery was one of the first in LAND O'LAKES—and we're still in there pitching." Yes—and there are thousands of other farmers just as glad as Mr. Bolluyt that they're working together the LAND O'LAKES way. Any man who milks cows owes it to himself to find out how he can gain, as others have—by selling through LAND O'LAKES.

We are now filling Junior Red Cross boxes that are to be sent overseas to needy children. Some of the things to choose from that we are putting in are: pencils, memo books, water colors, crayons, erasers, compass, protractor colored pencils, tooth brush, toothpaste or powder, wash cloth, comb, soap, games, balls beads, neckties, socks, handkerchiefs, sewing kit, buttons, needles, pins, thread and thimbles.

We had school on Washingtons birthday. Grades 5 and 6 gave an interesting program consisting of songs pantomines and sponsored an I Q Quiz Contest. They invited grades 7 and 8 and Mrs. Peterson.

The Boy Scouts are preparing to collect paper on Saturday.

There are now 12 girls enrolled in Girl Scouts. They have now completed their Tenderfoot requirements and are now in the Intermediate Group. The first badge they will work for is the Hostess Badge.

Farmer-Sportsmen

A committee of local farmers and sportsmen is searching for the farmers from this county who have made the greatest contribution to conservation through proper land use, soil management and sportsmen relationship.

County Agent Forbes this week asked for nominations from groups farmers and townspeople throughout the county. Nominations should be mailed or submitted to the county agent at Warren not later than March 10.

Farmers selected will compete for district honors. Winners from four districts in the state will receive awards and recognition at "Farmer-Sportsman Day" Sunday, April 1, at the Northwest Sports, Travel and Boat Show to be held in Minneapolis, March 23 to April 1.

Farmers receiving honorable mention will be presented with recognition certificates at county-wide meetings.

Agricultural Agent Forbes is acting as co-ordinator for nominations from this county. He will forward nominations the to state judges.

He would like to know of deserving farmers who have done a good job of carrying out wildlife conservation practices, land use and soil management and who have been active in promoting better farmer-hunter relations in the community.

Marshall County State Bank Has New FDIC Certificate

Mr. Geo. Fricker. Cashier of the Marshall County, today announced, receipt from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Washington, D. C. of a new certificate of membership giving effect to the recent increase in insurance coverage to $10,000. The Marshall County State Bank has been a member of FDIC since 1935.

Mr. Fricker pointed out that this insurance does not cost depositors of the bank a single penny. The surplus of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation which now exceeds $1,300,000,000, in addition to all deposit insurance losses and operating expenses of the Corporation has been paid in by the 13,650 insured banks of the Nation in the form of annual assessments based on their total deposits.

"Under the leadership of its Chairman, Maple T. Harl, and his predecessors," Mr. Fricker said. "the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has made a great contribution to the soundness and solvency of our banking system and to the safety and security of bank depositors. It has been seven years since any depositor of an insured bank suffered a loss, a new record for depositor safety in this Nation.

"This is in sharp contrast even to the synthetically prosperous days of early 1929 when the State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association reported with pride that: "All told there were 14 States in which there were no bank failures at all reported in the 1928 period, nine of these also having a clean record in this respect for two or more years.

A letter from FDIC Chairman Harl accompanied the certificate. It read in part:

"This certificate can be displaved in your banking rooms with pride in the accomplishments of a Corporation in which you and 13,600 other banking institutions are banded together for the protection of your depositors' funds.

"Each bank can take a great great share of the credit for the tact that nearly seven years have passed since an insured bank was placed in receivership.

Improved bank management coupled with diligent bank supervision, plus Federal deposit insurance have brought to our nation an era free from the specter of losses to depositors and eliminated the dread of and the devasting results from bank runs.

"This Corporation has made an outstanding contribution to this marvelous record, furthermore, has accumulated a surplus of nearly one and a half billion dollars as additional protection against any and all future contingencies which might in any way affect the solvency and stability of a dual banking system. In addition thereto, recent legislation enacted at the request of the Directors of this Corporation has materially simplified the assessment reporting procedure for all insured banks, likewise has provided a substantial reduction in the amount of their annual assessment outlay.

We are proud of the accomplishments and achievements of the American banking system, and by the same token we hope that you take justifiable pride in the record achieved by your Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation since its inception," Mr. Harl's letter concluded.

Two Services Here Sunday

The Nazareth Church congregation and friends, on Sunday are priviledged to have two services scheduled, one at 11:00 conducted by Mr. Brandt, of St. Paul, who is becoming well known here and a service in the evening by Pastor E. O. Urness of Milnor, N. D. who, with his family, will visit here a few days

Both these services are a welcome treat during this Lenten season. Come early if you want a seat.

Restrictions On Truck Loads Now in Effect

Road restrictions were clamped on highways this morning (February 28th) by the Minnesota Highway Department, according to information received by this newspaper.

The season of road restrictions and reduced load limits, bringing transportation problems as inherent to every Minnesota Spring as are vacation trips and blue waters to a Minnesota Summer, is rapidly approaching, the State Highway Department warned this week.

Getting itself on record at the outset as being "no weather prognosticator," nevertheless the Department cautioned that the very prevalance of steady cold throughout the winter might well indicate an early thawing season, in which case the annual road breakup might come early — and with a rush.

The southern part of the state particularly was urged to be prepared for the possibility that road restrictions might have to be imposed in that area as early as the first week in March. The Highway Department holds off as long as it can without endangering the roads to damage, but when the bituminous and gravel surfaces and supporting soils start to soften as a result of frost action and subsequent thawing, it has no alternative but to restrict axle-loads to limits in keeping with whatever weight each particular trunk highway can safely bear. By the heights of the season, at least 8,000 miles of the state's 11,900 mile trunk system are expected to require restrictions below normal legal limits.

Advance warnings were sent out to shipping and hauling organizations throughout the state two weeks ago, thus giving them opportunity to get as much of the heavy hauling out of the way as possible while the ground is frozen.

Restrictions on state trunk routes are posted individually, on each section of each route, based upon engineers' calculations and past experiences as to the maximum axle loads that each particular section is capable of carrying without subjecting it to excessive damage, and the subsequent prohibitive cost of repair and rehabilitation. Throughout the entire spring breakup season the Minnesota Highway Department issues to all travel agencies, and to all shipping and hauling organizations which request it, a day-to-day special bulletin listing all sections of state routes which are being posted and the limits which will apply. Except in sudden or unforseen cases where immediate posting becomes necessary, these bulletins also give an advance listing of the highways on which restrictions are expected to be necessary within the subsequent few days.

Every effort is made to avoid restricting any highway until such action is actually necessary to preserve the road, and later in the spring the load limits are lifted by degrees as the conditions of each roadway justifies.

A different situation prevails with regard to county and town roads. All county and township roads, other than paved sections, and except for a limited area in the extreme northern and northeastern part of the state, are arbitrarily restricted by law to maximum axle weight limits of four tons per axle for a period beginning on March 20 and ending on May 15.

Sewing Hint

Finish seams on material that ravels easily by turning the edges and machine stitching. This is a good idea for unlined jackets, also.

16 Join Holt Boy Scout Troop

Sixteen boys have now joined the Holt Boy Scout troop and are enthusiastically working on Scout projects. The boys are going to conduct a series of paper drives, and one pancake supper, to raise funds for summer camps and scout uniforms. Their first waste paper collection will be Saturday.

A Tenderfoot investituture ceremony is being planned for spring when a troop of scouts from Thief River will induct the boys into scouting.

Alonzo Inman is Scoutmaster assisted by Hartley Peterson. The Troop is sponsored by the School Board of the Holt School. Committee members include Harold Nohre, Chairman, L. M. Larson, Edgar Wegge, Myron Gunheim. Marvin Sandberg and Robert Nyval. The School Board is to be commended on the sponsoring of such a worthwhile project.

Field Scout Executive, Ed Dery of Thief River Falls met with the Scouts and Mr. Inman at the Troop's meeting Friday.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Anne Delahay arrives at the Thorndyke house and is invited by Dorinda to accompany her to the beach where the latter is to meet a neighbor Cleve Adams. Anne is the librarian in the town where Stella Moore, an unemployed secretary, is posing as Dorinda LaCroix. She has been employed by Edward Thorndyke to take the role. He explained he feared his mother, Dorinda's grandmother, might be fatally shocked if she learned the real Dorinda was dead. Grandmother Thorndyke discovers the hoax and, apparently, dies of a subsequent heart attack. Anne is given one of Dorinda's swim suits and is killed when a boulder from a cliff crashes down on her at the beach. The sheriff is called.

CHAPTER XI

Almost upon the heels of his words, the red police car flashed by the window. Dorinda saw three men get out, Deputy Sheriff Hawley and two others unknown to her. "Charles Poole, the sheriff, and Dr. Hanlon, the coroner," Dr. Evans identified them. They did not come to the house but headed in the direction of the beach.

Fifteen minutes passed. Dr. Evans fidgeted and looked at his watch again. "I should be getting along on my afternoon calls," he murmured, and then hoisted himself to his feet, relief spreading over his round face, as Cleve came into the room.

"Glad you've come, my boy. I've really got to get away. But I couldn't leave Miss Dorinda here." He picked up the black bag, opened it and selected a bottle of white tablets. He shook out a half dozen in his hand and slid them into a small white envelope.

"Take a couple of these when you go to bed," he told Dorinda. "That way you'll get some sleep. You'll need it." He laid the envelope on the table. "Tell Poole if he asks for me, that he can see me later. There's nothing I could tell him anyway."

Cleve came across the room to where she still stood by the window. "Poor kid," he said and put his arms around her.

Dorinda Is Puzzled By Mystery Footsteps

His hand tightened about her fingers. "Thank God it wasn't you!" he said huskily.

She frowned, trying to think. There was something—but she couldn't remember.

"The rain had eaten into the bluff, too," Cleve went on. "Just beyond the weak place in the wall, the dirt had fallen away."

Dorinda said again, as she had said to Dr. Evans, "It was an accident, wasn't it, Cleve?"

The look he turned on her was full of surprise. "Why, of course. Good Lord, honey, you don't think someone pushed the boulder over, did you?"

"No, not really. Only why did it come down just then—when she was there. It might have fallen any time but had to be today, at just that minute." She felt her throat thicken.

"It just happened, that's all. No wonder you've been terrified with an idea like that in your head. Why, who on earth would want to harm a nice kid like Anne? That's ridiculous, Dorinda."

Dorinda's forehead was puckered. If she could only remember—She rubbed her hand across her eyes. "I think I know, Cleve. I'm a little dazed yet, that's all."

Her eyes slid past him. "Oh, Harriet!" she said blankly.

Harriet stood in the doorway, her gray eyes dull, her sallow face wrinkled as if she had been asleep. "Are you and Cleve here alone?" she asked, stiffly disapproving.

"Aunt Harriet, have you been here all the time? Were you walking along the upstairs hall?" Dorinda demanded.

"I've been here several hours. I was asleep most of the time." She added primly, "I went out into the hall once. Lana'd left the bathroom door fastened on my side and I had to go outside and through her room."

Dorinda gave a brittle little laugh. That showed what a hysterical fool she was—working herself into a panic of fear because she'd heard footsteps in a house supposedly empty. And all the time it was only poor harmless Harriet!

"But I thought you were at the Red Cross," she insisted.

Harriet's weak mouth tightened into stubborn lines. "I didn't like it there. I didn't know any of the women, so I only stayed a little while. I walked home."

She came closer to Dorinda, looking curiously into her tear-stained face. "You've been crying." Alarm kindled in her eyes. "Lana—nothing's happened to Lana?"

"No, no," Cleve assured her. "But there's been an accident." He told her, briefly. "The sheriff's down there now." His attention came back to Dorinda. "I wish you didn't have to talk to Poole about it today. But he'll want to ask questions. After all, you saw it happen—I wish you hadn't—and he'll want you to tell him about it."

"Charlie Poole? He's coming here to ask questions?" Harriet rubbed the tip of her narrow nose. The news of Anne's death did not seem to disturb her greatly. She didn't know Anne, her detached attitude said. The girl meant nothing to her. "I haven't talked to Charlie Poole for a long time," she went on in a pleased voice.

"Oh, you know him?" Dorinda's interest was caught by Harriet's tone.

"Of course I know him. We went through high school together. We were—quite good friends. Charlie was planning to go through college and law school. But his father died quite suddenly. There wasn't much money left and Charlie had his mother and that bunch of sisters on his hands." She gave the reddened tip of her nose a final rub. "Just about that time I met Hunt Thorndyke who was here visiting his brother and we got married and went away." She sighed. "I always thought if Charlie's father hadn't died so soon—"

A sudden flash of interest lit Poole's face.

She told Poole what had happened, her voice faltering at the end. Her eyes were tight little fists in her lap.

"You saw the boulder as it started down?" Poole asked. "You didn't see anything else? There was nothing, no one, no other movement at the top of the bluff?"

"No. No one. But—there was something—I can't remember—" She put her hands over her eyes, living all over again that moment when she had seen Anne die. Her hands dropped into her lap. "I remember now. It wasn't anything. Just a flash, a spot of something yellow."

Dorinda Tells of Flash Of Yellow on Cliff Top

"Something yellow?" Poole frowned. "Like what?"

"I don't know. Maybe it was a bush in the sun, a flower. Maybe there was a yellow lichen on the rock. I wasn't really looking up there. It's just that I have a feeling I saw yellow. Maybe I really didn't see anything."

"There are no bushes or flowers along the bluff. And no yellow lichen on the rocks there," Poole said flatly. He pulled a small sack of tobacco and a pack of papers from his breast pocket. He rolled a cigarette slowly and expertly.

"Here's something that looks like an accident. Maybe it is. I'm not saying it isn't. But I'm not satisfied. It's too convenient—the whole setup. Everyone away from the house, servants gone, the loose place—the only loose place in the whole wall, directly above that seat on the beach."

Dorinda heard the sibilant scratch of a match as he drew it across the sole of his shoe. "And you didn't see anyone but you did see something yellow in a place where yellow didn't belong. Think about it some more, Miss LaCroix. Maybe you'll remember what it was that you saw."

Dorinda shook her head. "No, as I said, it's just an impression. If anyone had been standing there, I'd have seen him. But I didn't, and of course, I didn't look again. I forgot all about it."

Poole moved restlessly. "I don't like this—not any part of it. There's too many unexplained things happening around Trentville lately. That salesman, Taylor, for example. We nearly passed that off as an accident, too. They tell me you knew him, Miss LaCroix."

"That's not fair, Poole," Cleve broke in hotly. "Just because he spoke to Dorinda. He might have spoken to half a dozen girls in town for all you know."

"Nothing to get excited about, Cleve." Poole blew a smoke ring into the air. "I'm just saying it's peculiar. I wonder now, just how long was Miss LaCroix out of sight today before you heard her scream?"

"She wasn't out of my sight at all," Cleve declared shortly. "I heard Anne cry out just when Dorinda went out into the water at the end of the bank. She took a couple of steps and started screaming herself. I can assure you she didn't have a chance to run up the steps and push the boulder down on Anne without me seeing her if that's what you're getting at."

"I think Miss LaCroix has told you everything she remembers," a soft voice interposed. "Maybe after she's had a rest and a night's sleep, she'll remember more. That happens, sometimes." Dr. Hanlon, seated in a shadowy corner, spoke for the first time since he had come into the room.

Dorinda, turning her head toward him, saw a heavy man dressed in a loose brown suit, vest unbuttoned over a convex belly. His prominent eyes, matching his suit, were the soft brown of a spaniel's. He nodded to her reassuringly, his lips pursing in a smile.

There were voices in the hall, excited voices. Carrie, her gaunt face flushed and anxious, appeared in the living-room door. Her sunken eyes sought Dorinda, ignoring the others in the room.

"Are you all right, Miss? I been worrying so. The hospital never called me. And my boy wasn't hurt at all."

A sudden flash of interest lit Poole's face. "You say your telephone summons was a false alarm?" he asked, his drawl quickening into terseness.

Carrie's eyes shifted from Dorinda to the sheriff. One big hand flew to her face, pressed against her mouth.

Carrie Was Lured Away By Fake Hospital Call

"Mr. Poole," she breathed. She looked frightened. "What are you doing here? Has something happened? Has someone else been killed?"

"Someone else?" He caught up her words swiftly. "Who was it that was killed in the first place?"

Carrie made a visible effort to compose herself. "I didn't mean nothin'," she said sullenly. "Only we've had a death in the family—and I got this phone call. And you're here."

Poole's eyes narrowed. "You didn't sound as if that were all you meant. But what about this telephone call? Tell me about it."

"There ain't much to tell. Mr. Greer took the call. He came and told me. They said it was the hospital at Westport calling and that my boy had been hurt in an auto accident and for me to come right away."

"And you didn't talk to the hospital yourself? Did you hear the telephone ring?"

"No, I was upstairs. But Mr. Greer came up and told me. And he said if Miss Dorinda didn't care, he'd drive me up to Westport."

"And you went?"

"Yes, I had the lunch packed for the beach picnic and I took it down and asked Miss Dorinda if I could go. I didn't feel so bad about leaving her because Miss Delahay and Mr. Adams were with her. And Mr. Adams said he wouldn't leave until me or Mr. Edward came back."

"You were afraid to leave Miss LaCroix alone? Why? Trentville is generally considered a pretty safe place."

Carrie's fingers were making little pleats in the front of her dress, pulling her cotton waist tight against her flat breast. "Well, I don't know. Only Miss Dorinda's so young and pretty. And you read in the city papers about funny things happening sometimes. I just didn't like to go away and think of her being by herself. Anyway, Mr. Edward wouldn't have liked it."

"I see. Well, go on. What happened after you left here?"

"We drove up to Westport just as fast as we could and went to the hospital. There's only one up there so we couldn't miss it. And they said they didn't know anything about an accident. And they hadn't phoned and my boy wasn't there." She sucked in her breath sharply. "So we went around to where he worked. That's Davidson's machine shop. He'd been working all day and couldn't figure what we were talking about. And finally we came back home."

Poole picked up his hat from the floor beside him. He turned it round and round in his lap, his fingers plucking at the narrow grosgrain band. "And is it your idea that someone was trying to get you away from the house?"

Carrie looked startled. "I didn't say that. I guess maybe someone else got hurt and they got the wrong number. It could'a been that way."

"It's possible, of course. I'll have to find out if there were any accidents in Westport today. Or if there were any telephone calls to this house from Westport."

Gov. Dewey Breaks With Top GOP Leaders on Arms Aid to Europe; Farm Aid Needed to Kill Rackets

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

DEWEY:

Breaks With Top Men

The hints at a serious rift in policy within the Republican party during the past few months took on definite form when Gov. Thomas E. Dewey took sharp issue with such top G.O.P. leaders as Taft of Ohio, Wherry of Nebraska, and former president Herbert Hoover over the defense of Europe.

In one of the bluntest statements ever made by Dewey, the New York governor said it would be "utmost of folly" to depend upon sea and air power to protect the U.S. against Communist aggression. He added, "Anyone who thinks you can defend the United States or any substantial part of the world with any two out of three branches of the armed forces, is ignoring every lesson of history."

He then urged faster mobilization and sending more American troops to Europe immediately. He said he felt the deployment of troops was no business of Congress.

This viewpoint is the exact opposite of Taft, Wherry and Hoover who have repeatedly demanded no more American troops be sent to Europe without prior approval of congress. They have also urged placing our faith in defense on overwhelming sea and air power.

Thus develops the serious riff within the Republican party that could have far-reaching results within the coming year. Politically it could mean that Dewey is dead as a possible G.O.P. standard bearer in 1952.

On the other hand, if Dewey's thinking is the expression of the majority of the Republican party, it could mean Taft, Wherry and Hoover will be stamped isolationists and doomed to ultimate oblivion.

In this connection, it was interesting to note that Dewey said, "Any isolationist speech is an aid to Stalin."

FARMERS:

Must Help Curb Rackets

With the government's order limiting the number of slaughterhouses that will be permitted to operate and the amount of livestock they can butcher, it became apparent it is going to take patriotism down on the farm to keep meat off the black market.

While big and middle-size slaughterers who provide most of the steaks and chops for the dinner table will be licensed, several hundred thousand farmers who usually butcher a few hogs, sheep for their own consumption or for local sale are exempt.

While these farmers right now don't account for much of the meat eaten in the United States, they are a potential headache for price controllers. During World War II many farmers sat up their own barnyard slaughterhouses with no more equipment than a tree, a rope, an ax, and a butcher knife.

It wasn't very sanitary, but plenty of racketeers were willing to buy the meat at fancy prices and truck it into the cities for sale at even fancier black market prices.

Price control officials are afraid that some farmers exempted from the slaughtering regulation might be lured into illicit butchering by the prospect of easy money. The job of keeping check on the farmers would require an army of enforcement agents, and is impossible under present conditions. For that reason it will take a lot of patriotism down on the farm if present slaughter regulations are to be enforced.

HOLLYWOOD:

Unpleasant Publicity

Hollywood, that land of make-believe so often in the headlines, appeared in line for considerable more publicity, but of an unpleasant nature.

The new avalanche began to roll when the house un-American activities committee announced plans to investigate certain Hollywood actors that would "inevitably" lead to a revival of the communism-in-Hollywood case.

In 1947 the committee investigated Communist influences in the movie capital in long and sensational hearings with the result that 10 writers and directors were convicted of contempt of congress for refusing to say whether they had ever been Communists. All went to jail.

The new hearings may do considerable good, but as in all such investigations, some innocent people can expect to be hurt.

Hitch-Hiker

William J. Newton, Jr., who first made headlines last August when he landed a seaplane at sea beside the "iron curtain" liner Batory and got into trouble with the FBI, is shown (left) as he was interviewed by correspondent Frank Conniff, after he turned up in Korea. Newton said he had hitch-hiked 12,000 miles to "kill some Communists" to clear his name of the taint of communism. The 8th army gave him a physical, turned him down as unfit.

PRICES:

Reach Record Level

The American public found itself in a strange position, one which it did not entirely understand and which presented frightening possibilities for the future.

The situation began to develop some weeks ago with the enactment of price-wage controls, which most people believed would halt the cost of living spiral. Shortly after the "freeze" went into force, numerous loopholes in the plan were made known by which many foods could jump from 5 to 200 per cent.

Later the gullible public was told by the bureau of lator statistics that wholesale prices reached a new record high despite the "price freeze." The main increases were in prices of food and farm products.

This, of course, caused immediate rumblings in labor's ranks. In turn, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan defended farmers against the charges that farm prices were "unreasonably high."

Economic stabilization administrator Eric Johnston, who has the most thankless job in the United States today, issued a statement saying that prices may advance a few more months and finally level off in midsummer.

The average American had no desire to see any one group of the nation's economy — farmers, laborers, manufacturers — unjustly bear the greatest burden of price and wage controls. But the average American was worried about how far he could stretch his pay check without drastically lowering his standard of living. He wanted to know if he could stand it until the midsummer leveling-off took place?

KOREA:

Reds Counterattack

With stunning force and typical blood-curdling methods, complete with suicidal charges, bugle-blowing, bell ringing, whistle-tooting, and drum-beating, Chinese Communists launched a counterdrive against U.N. forces in central Korea.

The counterattack stalled the U.N. advance that began late in January and which had approached Seoul.

Eighth army officers reported elements of nine Chinese divisions and six Korean divisions were used in the counterattack.

At full strength this would mean as many as 150,000 to 200,000 men. However, heavy casualties had been inflicted on the Communists since the U.N. offensive began. Officials claimed Red casualties, by ground action alone, totaled 80,121.

Some military observers believed Communist armies in Korea had been hurt so seriously in recent weeks they could not continue an offensive for a long period of time. Others, however, were cautious with their predictions, remembering the overwhelming manpower available to the Communist cause.

Morale was reported high among U.N. troops during recent weeks as they pushed slowly toward the 38th parallel.

EDUCATION

College Enrollment Drop Is Expected

Mobilization is having a drastic effect on colleges throughout the nation. A recent survey of American universities and colleges revealed that most institutions predict they will lose 25 to 50 per cent of their students before the end of this year.

Such a drop in enrollment will result in a sharp cut-back of faculty members, possibly as many as 20,000 to 25,000, who will be dismissed from their jobs or will not be replaced when they leave for military duty or war jobs, the survey revealed.

The drop in student enrollment is causing college officials serious concern. They report a decline of to 10 per cent in enrollment for spring semester which began January.

Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Bratteli accompanied the formers son and family Mr. and Mrs. Sam Bratteli and Bonnie Wayne and Dianne of Grygla, on a trip to Miami, Oklahoma. Starting from here Thursday morning, the trip took us through Minnesota, Iowa parts of Kansas and Missouri arriving at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hal Bratteli at Miami, Oklahoma, Friday evening. On the return trip we started from there Monday noon returning home Tuesday evening. The grand trip was thoroughly enjoyed. The warm spring weather there was lovely and was about like our May weather.

Keep to the Right But Not Too Far

"Keep to the right" is a well known rule of the road, but going too far to the right may mean danger. In wintertime, when snow has been plowed back wider than the roadway, what appears to be plowed shoulders may actually be deep snow, or even a snow filled ditch. Getting out too far to the right may result in cars getting stuck, or, in case of speed, may cause an accident, says the Minnesota Highway Department.

For safety, keep to the right of the centerline but stay on the main roadway. If necessary to stop, get out on the shoulder but be sure you have a safe place.

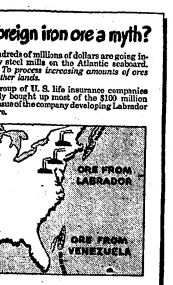
LET OTHER STATES PAY OUR ORE TAXES?

Is foreign iron ore a myth?

- Hundreds of millions of dollars are going into new steel mills on the Atlantic seaboard. Why? To process increasing amounts of ores from other lands.
- A group of U. S. life insurance companies recently bought up most of the $100 million bond issue of the company developing Labrador iron ore.

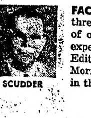


ONE ARGUMENT advanced in favor of higher iron ore taxes in Minnesota goes like this: "Sure, raise them. Minnesota can use the money — besides, the tax would be paid by steel consumers in the other 47 states!"

Wouldn't it be nice if it were so simple! But there's a hole in the argument big enough to drive an ore truck through. It's the cheery belief that America has to rely on our ore. In the past, that's been true. In the future, it may not.

The fact is that Minnesota no longer has an ore monopoly. Today for the first time, Minnesota's ore industry faces big-time competition: from the high-grade ores of Labrador and Venezuela, from the taconites of other states.

The surest way to hobble Minnesota's chances of meeting and beating this competition is to load still higher taxes atop the $31.5 millions the iron ore industry is already paying.



SCUDDER

FACES THREAT. "The mining industry of Minnesota, faced by the threat of foreign competition and confronted with increasing costs of operation—especially in development of low-grade ores—can be expected to oppose any suggestions for hiking ore taxes." So writes Editor John H. Scudder of the Little Falls Daily Transcript. "We in Morrison County—with a developing mining future—are interested in the outcome," he says.

DID YOU KNOW—

—that there is only one way for Minnesota's iron ore industry to survive? That is to turn increasingly to the low-grade and taconite ores as the high-grades run out.

—that processing these leaner ores is a manufacturing operation calling for hundreds of millions to be invested in great "ore factories"?

—that despite higher costs, Minnesota's ore must be produced cheaply enough to meet increased competition from other ore areas?

—that more ore factories can be built . . . more jobs created . . . if Minnesota's ore industry is taxed as fairly as other industries?

A fair deal for Minnesota's iron ore means a good deal for you

Timber Wolf Appeared In Refuge

In recent years timber wolves have appeared in the Mud Lake area as only occasional winter transients, On the night of Feb. 29, a single timber wolf crossed the Mud Lake dike (from the east) pulled down an adult buck deer, and then took on a 20 pound male raccoon - all in one night, and in an area of less than one acre.

Tracks, patches of hide and fur, carcasses of the deer and racoon, blood splattered willow brush developed the story as follows:

The wolf apparently was in the usual loping gait to within 100 feet of the deer - he then turned on the speed, and pulled down and killed the deer within 60 feet of the where they first met. The wolf did not kill this animal for sport as left front shoulder, both hind quarters, and much of the paunch had been eaten. Large sections of ribs, had been taken, and the deer carcass had been turned completely over.

Upon leaving the deer the the wolf traveled only 130 feet, met the racoon, and a real life and death battle resulted, with the coon giving the wolf a tremendous battle before finally succumping.

At least seven separate "fighting rings" were located. in an area of .1 acre, In each spot the coon had fought it out with the wolf and left patches of hide fur in each case.

The bona fide timber wolf is difficult to trap, but a number of sets have been made, and plane hunting will be resorted to if it appears the animal might decide to remain in the refuge area in order to obtain an easy living on the wintering herd of some 860 deer and 49 moose.

Self Employed Covered by Social Security

"The self-employed, to whom coverage was extended by the 1950 Amendmentc of the Social Security Act, do not have an option of coming in or staying out" said W. D. Kistler, Manager of the Grand Forks Social Security Administration field offce.

"A program of voluntary coverage would be almost impossible to administer. This is probably the reason Congress brought the self-employed groups in on a compulsory basis, " he said.

"The self-employed will need to have social security account numbers like their employees," he advised.

"The amount of net profit or net earnings from self-employment should be reported when such persons file Income Tax Returns for 1951, (due in 1952). A Social Security Report Form, will be part of the income tax blank. The social security tax on self employment income will be 2¼ per cent through the year 1943," he said.

A representative of the Grand Forks Offce, Social Security Administration, will call at the employment office, in Thief River Falls on Tuesday March 13 starting at 10 a. m.. He will answer inquiries and accept claims.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Protects Your Funds in this Bank

There can be no question about the security of funds entrusted to this institution.

Through the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, created by Congress as a permanent agency, each depositor is protected against loss up to $10,000.

Although this insurance is provided by a Federal agency, we pay the premiums for your added protection. This additional security for deposits should be a real incentive for you to open an account here. It furnishes a sound basis for confidence in the safety of your funds under all conditions.

To eliminate constant polishing of silver items, coat with a thin layer of white shellac and the silver will not tarnish. You can always wipe off the shellac with denatured alcohol followed quickly by a washing with mild soap and water.

Refrigerator Running

A refrigerator should run only one-third of the time. If it runs more, the temperature may be set too low, the freezing unit may need defrosting, or a gasket on the door may need replacing.

Marketing Pigs

Farmers are finding it pays to send a ton of pork to market in 10 pigskins instead of eight. In other words, 200-pound pigs usually fit current market demands better than 250-pounders.

Storing Jams

All jams and jellies should be stored in your refrigerator after the containers are opened to keep them cold and firm and to prevent spoilage.

Grapefruit Garnish

Mint jelly adds a refreshing flavor to grapefruit. After the grapefruit has been prepared in the usual way, insert a cube of mint jelly in the center and serve.

Stem Rust Disease

Stem rust disease on stems of grain plants is really a tiny plant itself. It is a fungus which takes its food from the grain plant on which it grows.

Sandwich Filling

A different sandwich filling can be made from honey mixed with chopped or grated, vitamin-rich orange peel.

Home Accidents

Knives and other sharp tools cause about one-seventh of the home accidents in the United States.

Economical Cough Relief! Try This Home Mixture

No Cooking. Makes Big Saving.

To get quick and satisfying relief from coughs due to colds, mix this recipe in your kitchen.

First, make a syrup with 2 cups granulated sugar and one cup of water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Then get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist. This is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action on throat and bronchial irritations.

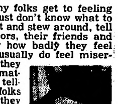
Put Pinex into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. Thus you make a full pint of splendid medicine—about four times as much for your money. It never spoils, and tastes fine.

And for quick, blessed relief, it is surprising. You can feel it take hold in a way that means business. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, eases soreness. Makes breathing easy, and lets you get restful sleep. Just try it, and if not pleased, your money will be refunded.

FOR EXTRA CONVENIENCE GET NEW READY-MIXED, READY-TO-USE PINEX!

Don't Talk About Troubles; Correct Them Says Mother

When many folks get to feeling badly they just don't know what to do. They fret and stew around, tell their neighbors, their friends and their family how badly they feel—and they usually do feel miserable. But they don't help matters any by telling other folks how badly they feel all the time, because most folks don't want to be around them when they act that way. Now, for example, take Mrs. Zina Lee Bowman, Route 6, Clees Ferry Road, Nashville, Tennessee. When she got to feeling badly, she began taking HADACOL and found that by taking HADACOL she gave her system Vitamins B^1, B^2, Niacin and Iron in which she was deficient.



Here is Mrs. Bowman's own statement: "I was so weak I could hardly do my housework. I am 30 years old. I am the mother of 9 children. I was so nervous I hardly wanted the children to speak. I had to rest after I got breakfast and before I cleaned my house. I have taken almost 4 bottles of HADACOL, and I feel fine. The children can make all the noise they wish, and it doesn't bother me. In fact, I join them in their ball games and other games. We are a happy family, thanks to HADACOL."

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 hospital economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied. —Adv.

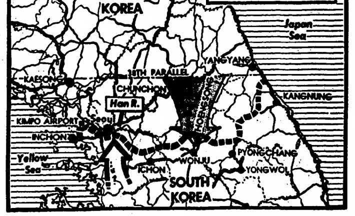
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Premier Joe Stalin Attacks Britain, United States for Korean Conflict; 100,000 European Force Is Planned

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



The Chinese Communist offensive aimed at Wonju in an effort to split the United Nations line came to an abrupt halt with the destruction of two Red divisions. U.N. troops then pushed forward in a limited offensive that carried up to six miles along the 70-mile sector from Seoul to Wonju. The Reds were reported to have lost approximately 31,000 troops in their one week offensive.

STALIN:
The Role of Prophet

Prime Minister Stalin, in one of his rare public statements, predicted the United States and Great Britain are doomed to defeat in Korea, and the disintegration of the United Nations.

Assuming the role of a prophet thundering from his mountain, the Soviet leader attempted to intimidate the free nations of the world, to stir up discord between the North Atlantic pact nations, and brand Russia the only true champion of world peace. He succeeded only in tangling himself in a web of contradictions and lies.

There was even a minor threat of war when he said war "cannot be considered inevitable," but that it might come if the "warmongers succeed in entangling the masses of the people in lies, in deceiving them."

Stalin went so far as to blisteringly denounce British Prime Minister Attlee for "lying" in saying that Russia had not demobilized after World War II. For his efforts in this direction, Stalin received a sharp slap by the British government with the charge that Russian armed forces now total 175 divisions, 25,000 tanks and 20,000 planes. With tongue in cheek, the British pointed out that figures don't lie.

Some western observers, noting Stalin's assertion that the U.N. was "burying its moral prestige and dooming itself to disintegration," believed Russia may be preparing to quit the organization.

No one in his right mind could believe any of Stalin's statements and the left-handed assertion that Russia really wants peace. To the contrary, Stalin's statements and the American and British replies only point up the seriousness of the present world situation.

The statement should do much to bring about a concentrated effort on the part of the west for what now seems inevitable.

KOREA:
Reds Pull Back

United Nations troops in Korea regained the offensive after breaking the back of the communist attack which saw the Chinese suffering an estimated 31,000 casualties.

Lt. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway's troops pushed forward in limited advances, but there were indications that Ridgway would not cross the 38th parallel in the immediate future.

There remain large unlocated Chinese elements north of the old political boundary line and the Chinese could bring down masses of men from further north.

Ground gains have assumed a secondary role in the Korean fighting. General Ridgway seems to be operating on the theory of hitting the Communists where the maximum number of casualties can be inflicted and retiring to established positions to plan the next move.

No one can foresee the end of the Korean war which has raged up and down the peninsula for eight months. And although the Chinese have suffered defects in recent weeks there is no indication that they are seriously hurt.

TROOPS:
Marshall Tells Plans

Gen. George Marshall, secretary of defense, took much of the steam out of the "great debate" over the question of American military aid to Europe when he told congress that the U.S. planned to send 100,000 more men abroad. The number was much smaller than had been expected.

It seems fortunate that opponents of the administration's foreign policy finally forced General Marshall to reveal the exact number of men. It certainly provided the Soviet Union with a valuable bit of military information.

Official Washington circles reported that sharp debate preceded the decision to tell the size of the army planned for Europe. Both the defense and state departments were against the disclosure.

However, continued attacks on foreign military aid by influential senators, including Taft of Ohio and Wherry of Nebraska, forced the decision. These attacks were continued even after Taft and members of the senate armed service committee were informed in secret of the plans.

General Marshall told the senators that for security reasons he spoke "reluctantly." His reluctance was understandable in that he knew and disapproved of giving aid and comfort to a possible enemy of the United States. It is too bad other prominent figures on the national scene did not feel the same way as General Marshall, Washington observers reported.

LABOR:
An Open Revolt

Angry labor leaders were in open revolt against the nations mobilization program. It began when the wage stablization board voted 6 to 3 to stabilize wages at a level generally 10 per cent above that of January 15, 1950. Three labor members quit the board.

But labor's complaint against the board's new formula for equalizing wages proved to be only a pretext. What they really had on their chests was a whole series of gripes against Charles E. Wilson, director of mobilization.

They contended that labor was not given a prominent place in policy-making, and that attempts were made to freeze wages while food prices and rents were still unsettled.

Many observers believed that the blowup was inevitable, that sooner or later someone would challenge the vast power bestowed upon Wilson and the "bull-it-through" manner in which he wielded that power.

It was the old story of big business and labor in open conflict. But in this instance it was the nation's mobilization program that suffered.

Also on the labor front, the brotherhood of railway trainmen unexpectedly pleaded guilty to contempt charges arising from "sick" strikes in the Washington yards and were fined $75,000.

Labor circles wondered to what extent the guilty plea—a union assuming responsibility for "wildcat" strikes—would effect other pending cases, and whether it would help control wildcat tactics in the future.

NEW BIBLE

Modern English Edition Is Planned

The division of Christian education, National Council of The Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., announced a revised edition of the Bible will be ready for distribution by September 30, 1952.

The new Bible will be in clear, modern English, with words of more modern usage substituted for words which long ago lost their meaning. Although there is some minor opposition to another revision the council is expected to proceed with its plan.

The new revised standard version will go to press after scholars complete the translation of the Old Testament. Translation of the New Testament was completed in 1946. The revised standard version was first authorized in 1937 by the council's predecessor.

Brucellosis Is Danger in Work

ALTHOUGH FARMERS are in constant danger of getting brucellosis from cattle and swine, veterinarians and packinghouse workers run an even greater risk, according to a report in the Journal of the American veterinary medical association.

The report, made after a joint survey by the U.S. public health service and the Indiana state board of health, declared that brucellosis can be regarded as an "occupational hazard' of persons whose work brings them into contact with infected animals.

Through use of a blood test, it can be determined if a person has been exposed to brucellosis.

Tests showed that as many as 25 per cent of one group of veterinarians either had had the disease or had been exposed to it. The tests were made during a three-year period on more than 600 veterinarians.

Considerable numbers of packinghouse employees also showed exposure to the disease. Numbers of reactors to the test were highest on jobs requiring frequent contact with infected animals—with group percentages running as high as 33 per cent.

When groups of farm workers were tested, slightly less than four per cent of the men reacted to the test and less than two per cent of the women.

Employees of a rendering plant also showed a high incidence of exposure, with some 27 per cent giving positive readings on the blood test.

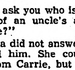
Tight Rope
By Allison L. Burks



Dorinda LaCroix is really Stella Moore, masquerading as a dead girl in an effort—so she is told—by Edward Thorndyke to save the real Dorinda's grandmother, Mrs. Thorndyke from shock of learning the real Dorinda is dead. Dorinda believes Mrs. Thorndyke may have been suffocated by someone holding her face against a pillow. Dorinda's girl friend, Anne Delahay, has been killed by a boulder crashing from a cliff top while she, Dorinda, and Cleve Adams were on a beach picnic. Dorinda is puzzled by mysterious footsteps she heard in the Thorndyke upstairs hall when the house was supposed to be empty. The maid Carrie tells of having been lured away by a fake phone call.

CHAPTER XII

Carrie stared at him, her mouth open. "You mean maybe there wasn't any call at all? That Mr. Greer made it up?"

Poole shrugged. "We've only his word for it."

"Well, he wouldn't do that. Why would he tell me a lie like that?"

Poole grinned briefly. "He might have wanted to take a nice afternoon drive. Was he with you all the time you were gone?"

"Of course he was. He drove me around to all them places I told you about. And he came home with me and he's out in the kitchen now."

"I'll talk to him presently. I'd like a little first-hand information about this purported call."

"I can't figure why you're so interested." Carrie's tone was edged with exasperation. "And what are you doing here anyway?"

She looked at Dorinda, a question in her eyes. The girl knew as plainly as if the words were spoken, that Carrie was asking, "Did you tell them about the lipstick on the pillow?"

She shook her head in a barely perceptible movement and became aware of the sheriff's eyes upon her. He was studying her intently, as if trying to see the picture in her mind. She bit her lip. Sheriff Poole might be slow in speech but there wasn't anything slow about his acuteness.

Carrie had discovered Dr. Hanlon in his inconspicuous seat in the corner. "And you're here, too, Dr. Hanlon. Is someone hurt? Miss Dorinda's all right—"

"Yes, Miss Dorinda's all right," Poole repeated. He added, with a brutal directness, "But Miss Anne Delahay's dead. A boulder from the rock wall rolled down and struck her."

"Miss Delahay dead?" Dorinda could barely hear the words. "Who—who did it?"

Sheriff Poole Gets Investigation Underway

"Who did it?" Poole's eyebrows lifted. "You're quick to assume someone did it. It was—or was meant to appear as — an accident."

Some of the grayness was fading from Carrie's face. "I couldn't figure how a stone'd get loose from that wall. That was a good wall. But I guess maybe it was an accident." She pulled her thin lips into a grotesque caricature of a smile. "Nobody'd want to hurt Miss Delahay."

"Unless it was one of those funny things you read about in the city papers," suggested Poole. He shook his head. "I'm afraid that idea won't work. The cement had been loosened around that boulder—that one boulder in the whole wall—either by time and weather or by some person who wanted it loose for his own purposes. It's too much to suppose the boulder happened to be loose and a tramp or some homicidal nut happened to come along. It could have been an accident. I don't believe it was a tramp. You never saw anyone fooling around that wall, did you, Carrie?"

Her answer was slow in coming. "No, I never saw anyone."

He looked at her keenly. "It doesn't sound right, Carrie, the way you said that. You didn't see anyone. Did you see anything or hear anything?"

"Well, it wasn't much," Carrie admitted reluctantly. "Only one night last week—Friday, it was, the day Mrs. Thorndyke died—I wasn't sleeping so well and I got up and thought I'd fix me some hot milk. I turned on the light and went to the window to pull my shade—my room's at the back of the house—and I thought I saw a little light down somewhere along the top of the bank. It went out while I was looking."

"A little light," Poole said the words over thoughtfully. "What sort of a light? Like a lantern, a flashlight?"

"It could'a been a flashlight," Carrie said. She sighed wearily. "I sort of got to thinking about it and next night I got up three or four times and looked. And I saw it again. I didn't like the idea of someone prowling around and I put on my bathrobe and went and woke Mr. Greer. He went down there but he didn't find anybody. I didn't see the light any more."

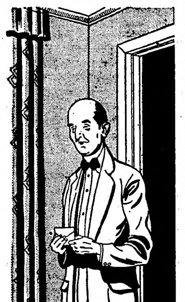
Poole stood up. "There's nothing more I can do around here tonight except I'll have a word or two with Greer before I go. I'll be around in the morning to see the other members of the family. Maybe you folks will think of something else by that time, too."

Harriet went as far as the door of the living room with the two men. "It was nice to see you again after all this time." She added quickly, "Only, of course, it's too bad it had to be a death that brought you here. Do you realize that this is the first time we've spoken to each other since I've been back at Thorndyke House? It brings back old times. There's been lots of changes since I left Trentville."

Poole looked at her gravely. "Yes, there's been lots of changes in the past twenty-five years," he agreed. He inclined his head a fraction of an inch, made a motion as if to place his big Stetson back on his grizzled hair, decided not to, and turned toward the kitchen.

Carrie pushed open the door from the dining room with one elbow. She carried a tray with a silver coffee pot, cups, sugar and cream. She set it down on the coffee table in front of Dorinda.

She did not go away at once but lingered, fists pushing down in her apron pockets. "I don't know what Mr. Edward will say," she quavered, catching Dorinda's glance. "He won't like it, me talking so much."



Greer came into the breakfast room.

She hesitated, then asked a little shyly, "Were you and Mr. Adams right there when Miss Delahay got killed?"

"We weren't with her. We'd gone around the end of the cove. I was just coming back when—it happened."

"She was all alone—sittin' on that rock where you go every day?"

Dorinda looked at her curiously. "Yes, Carrie. Why?"

"Miss Dorinda, when I went down to the sand this afternoon, I saw Miss Anne there with her back to me, wearin' that suit I knew belonged to you. Just for a minute I thought it was you. Suppose someone did push that boulder—whoever did it mightn't of known it was her down on the rock. They might have thought it was you!"

She looked up at Cleve. His face, white and strained, was touched for the first time with doubt. "It's too fantastic," he said harshly. "I don't believe it. Things like that don't happen. Not here. Not to people like us."

Edward Tells Belief Mishap Series is Over

"Perhaps that's what everyone thinks," Dorinda said soberly. "But every day something horrible and tragic happens to someone."

"In cities maybe," Cleve admitted. "Not in Trentville."

Dorinda shook her head. She lifted the silver coffee pot, filled the cups, "Sugar and cream?"

Cleve nodded absently. He took the cup she handed him, balanced it on one knee. "Can you think of one conceivable reason why anyone would want you out of the way?" He asked violently.

He turned to Carrie. "Do you know of any reason?"

Carrie's face was a study of indecision. "No, Mr. Cleve, I don't know anything. I've thought and thought about it. Unless it could be someone was jealous. Someone who thought she was too young and too pretty—"

"That's ridiculous," Cleve declared. "Who is there to be jealous of Dorinda? I'm your only follower, aren't I, honey? And I know there's no jealous rival planning to remove you on my account."

"I wasn't thinking of you." Carrie looked at Dorinda, her eyes full of meaning. "But Mr. Edward—he thinks a lot of you, Miss."

Cleve laughed suddenly. "Now I know you're both insane." There was relief in his voice. "Of all the nightmares women can conjure up! Carrie, Dorinda, in the name of reason I ask you who is going to be jealous of an uncle's affection for his niece?"

Dorinda did not answer. She hardly heard him. She could not look away from Carrie, but sat, staring, at the maid's expression. Carrie knew she was not Dorinda LaCroix. And Edward had believed they could keep it a secret!

For Carrie knew, and still she liked Dorinda, trusted her, wanted to help her. The girl's eyes filled with tears. "Thank you, Carrie," she said.

"You go on up to bed, Miss Dorinda. I'll bring you up a glass of hot milk in a few minutes."

"Yes, Carrie." Dorinda was docile. She felt unutterably weary. Her head ached. What she wanted right now, more than anything else, was the solace of her own bed and sleep, a long, long sleep. She clutched the envelope in her hand. Sleep—that was what those little tablets promised.

"Sometimes I think it takes more than education to eradicate the primitive superstition which lies beneath the surface in most of us," said Edward pompously. He added a little more sugar to his coffee. "Reason to the contrary, I find myself yielding to the belief that fatalities do come in threes."

Dorinda stared at him in astonishment. This morning it seemed that yesterday couldn't have happened; that the whole thing must have been the figment of some particularly horrifying nightmare.

"You think then that this last accident was necessary to complete a cycle?" There was a disagreeable note in Fay's voice. Her beautiful face was colorless, her blue eyes heavily shadowed as if she had slept but little.

"Necessary? Let's not put it so crudely. Say rather it added a period. We'll believe now that this disagreeable series is over and anticipate brighter days ahead."

Poole Questions Carol About Her Activities

The door was pushed open and Greer came into the breakfast room. He laid an oblong square of yellow beside Edward's plate. "A telegram for you, sir," he said, his narrow gray face expressionless, and left them.

Edward tore open the envelope, unfolded the yellow sheet. He stared down at the printed words, then crumpled the paper and dropped it on the table without speaking. Edward pushed back his plate.

He spoke then, reluctantly answering the insistent inquiry in Fay's face. "The telegram is from Morrow. I wired him not to hurry." He drew a long breath. "However, he will arrive Thursday night."

"Who is Morrow?" Dorinda asked timidly.

Edward turned in his chair. "Morrow, my dear, is my mother's attorney. As perhaps you know, it is customary to read the will immediately following the funeral. In this case there has been a delay owing to Mr. Morrow's absence from the city on business. However, as I said, he will be here late Thursday and we will learn exactly how my mother wished to dispose of her holdings."

"But you already know, don't you? You said—"

"Yes, Dorinda, I already know. I have known for a good many years."

Harriet straightened herself in her chair, her pale eyes avid. "But your mother made a new will last summer, didn't she, Edward? I'm sure I remember. She sent for Mr. Morrow and—"

"My mother made a few minor changes," Edward interrupted her smoothly. "I am sure there were no major alterations."

He stood up. "If I'm not mistaken, that is the sheriff's car coming along the driveway now. I suppose we're in for a bout of extensive questioning about an accident of which we know nothing. Come, Fay, Lana, let's get it over."

At eleven-fifteen the doorbell rang. Her heart leaped at the sound. Cleve? Her lips formed his name. But it was not Cleve. As Greer opened the door, she could look beyond him and see Carol standing in the portico. She stepped into the hall just as Poole, followed by Edward and the three women, came out of the living room. Carol looked from Poole to Dorinda, her black eyes wide and shocked.

Edward stepped forward. "Carol, this is the sheriff. Mr. Poole, Miss Hughes was my mother's nurse. She has been and will continue to be for the next few days part of our small family here." He hesitated. "Miss Hughes was not here yesterday, Sheriff. I'm sure there is nothing she could tell you."

Poole looked at Carol, his face unsmiling. "Do you mind telling me where you were, Miss Hughes?"

"Of course not. I went to Los Angeles yesterday. I spent the night with a friend, another nurse, Olga Hastings, at the Harvard Apartments. But I don't understand." Carol was bewildered. "What has happened?"

RED STAR SPECIAL ACTIVE DRY YEAST DISSOLVES FASTER
I LIKE RED STAR'S FAST RISING ACTION
RED STAR
QUICK RISING
DRY YEAST
SPECIAL ACTIVE

30 MINUTE HOT CROSS BUNS

- 2 packages Red Star Special Active Dry Yeast
- 1¼ cups warm water (105° to 110° F.)
- ¼ cup sugar
- 1¼ teaspoons salt
- 1 egg
- 3 cups sifted all purpose flour
- 1 cup raisins
- ¼ cup chopped citron
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- 2 tablespoons shortening, melted and cooled to lukewarm

Step 1: Dissolve yeast in warm water (105° to 110° F.) in large mixing bowl. Step 2: Add sugar, salt, unbeaten egg, flour, raisins, citron and cinnamon. Beat well with electric mixer on low or medium speed; or by hand with large wooden spoon. Add shortening, beating until thoroughly mixed. Step 3: Spoon dough into well greased muffin pans, filling about one-third full. Step 4: Let rise in warm place (90° to 95° F.) until dough has risen level with top of muffin pans (about 25 to 30 minutes). Step 5: Bake in moderately hot oven (375° to 400° F.) 20 minutes. Step 6: Remove from pans and glaze with thin powdered sugar icing. When cool, make a cross on each with plain icing. Yields 18 to 24 buns.

Let this tested recipe introduce you to wonderful Red Star yeast. You'll want to use Red Star in all your recipes. Remember, it keeps fresh for months without refrigeration.

Pastures 'Don't Just Stay Good'; Need Planning, Management and Fertilization

PASTURES just "don't stay good." They have to be kept that way by careful planning, management and adequate fertilization, according to a statement issued here by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

The committee cites these steps suggested by J. L. Haynes, of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station for keeping semi-permanent grassland acreages in top production for five or six years without reseeding:

Seed well adapted, high-yielding legumes and grasses. Alfalfa and ladino clover and brome-grass or orchard grass make good combinations.

Maintain a high lime level in the soil.

At seeding time add the equivalent of 100 pounds per acre of 20 per cent superphosphate for each year of expected stand. Thereafter top-dress pastures each year with generous amounts of phosphate and potash. On most farms, 300 to 400 pounds per acre of 0-9-27, 0-10-20 or 0-20-20 will keep legume stands thick and vigorous.

Maintain the life and palatability of pasture with good grazing management. Avoid overgrazing. Don't let cattle graze on one field for too long a period.

Divide pastures into small fenced paddocks so that most of the forage in any given paddock will be eaten within 10 days or less—at the rate of an acre for each 5 or 6 cows in the herd.

Harvest as grass silage the surplus forage in paddocks not used in the lush spring season. These harvested paddocks can later be included in the regular grazing sequence with spring grazed paddocks.

Taxes are Half the wholesale price of BEER

TAXES 50%

Do you know that taxes make up one-half the price of a barrel of beer delivered to the retailer?

On a barrel of 3.2 beer the Federal Excise Tax is $8.00 and the State Excise Tax is $1.10, making a total of $9.10; on strong beer the total Excise Taxes are $10.20. In addition, Minnesota's breweries pay real estate, personal property, unemployment, auto, truck, gasoline, income taxes, and license fees that bring the total taxes on all beer to approximately $10.60 per barrel.

Inasmuch as the average wholesale price of a barrel of beer is $21.00, it is obvious that 50% of the price paid is taxes.

Here is the common man's beverage carrying this load of taxes—yet there is proposed legislation to increase the State Excise Tax on 3.2 beer from $1.10 a barrel to $3.30—an increase of 200%.

This proposed increase of 200% in the State Excise Tax is in reality a Sales Tax and a discriminatory one as it applies to only one product—beer—a product consumed mostly by the masses.

Minnesota is among the ten leading states in the production of beer. Other states encourage their brewing industries—for instance, in our neighboring State of Wisconsin—which leads the nation in production—the State Excise Tax is only $1.00 per barrel, and in Missouri and California it is only 62 cents.

Is it wise to discourage Minnesota's brewing industry by adding 200 per cent to the State Excise Tax on 3.2 beer? Is it fair to impose excessive taxes on beer, of which the lower and middle income groups are the greatest consumers?

"WE'RE GETTING A SQUARE DEAL WITH LAND O' LAKES" says L. A. BAUER, operator, Wabasso (Minn.) Cooperative Creamery Assn.

"As I see it, the big advantage in dealing with LAND O'LAKES is this," says Mr. Bauer. "We know we're being treated fairly! We know we're getting the best possible score on our butter!"

"The LAND O'LAKES fair deal policy and the quality improvement work of the LAND O'LAKES fieldmen have been a big help in increasing the dairyman's butterfat return. And a big help to the creameryman too. With their assistance we've been able to improve the quality of our products and that means bigger returns for our owner-patrons. But the important thing is that everybody gets the same square deal when you deal through LAND O'LAKES."

So take a tip from Mr. Bauer. If you're looking for a square deal marketing tie-up for your creamery, look into LAND O'LAKES. It pays!

Refuge Goose Pen Progressing Holt Merchant Donates Time

Construction work on the 150 acre goose pen at Mud Lake Refuge has proceeded despite the winter weather. Fence posts were cut and delivered to the Refuge early in December. Drag line work on ditching and building up the road and fence base continued throughout December and into January. Well drilling commenced in February, and it is expected that water will be obtained momentarily.

Excellent co-operation has been given by several local residents in the various phases of work connected with the project:

Mr. Louis Sagstuen, local Holt merchant, donated 6 days of his time and made the long trip to Missouri and aided in completing the transfer of the geese from the Swan Lake National Wildlife Refuge to Mud Lake - at his expense.

Mr. Hilmer Davidson, local well-driller, has donated considerable time in helping out on the well drilling, and has made available the use of his equipment at reduced costs.

A number of individuals in the local Sportsmen Clubs have pledged help at such time as actual fence construction can be commenced.

These contributions toward successful establishment of the Mud Lake goose-rearing project have been appreciated no end by Refuge personnel and the Fish and Wildlife Service.

The present National emergency has resulted in considerable reduction of funds and materials and all such contributed services have helped assure increased goose populations, and therefore improved goose hunting in this general area.

Michigan's Honey Crop

Michigan's 1947 honey production was estimated at 7,140,000 pounds, 29 per cent above the small 1946 crop of 5,500,000 pounds. According to the Michigan crop reporting service, the state's 1947 honey crop was produced by 204,000 colonies—a decrease of 8 per cent from the record 222,000 colonies a year earlier. Production per colony averaged 35 pounds, 10 pounds more than the record low average of 25 pounds in 1946.

When Cooking Veal

As every good cook knows, the secret of veal cookery is using a long, slow method. This will keep veal from being tough, even though it has little fat. For chops and cutlets, braising is better than frying. Roasting is usually recommended for the more tender cuts and pot-roasting for the less tender ones.

Ironing Linens

Iron linens on the wrong side to prevent shine. Since linens have a tendency to remain firm and crisp, starch is not necessary. However, a very light starching is advisable for cotton or rayon damask cloths.

Paints for Plastics

With the increasing production of plastic articles, one of the problems of industrial finish experts has been to develop colored coatings for them. Special finishes have been devised which enable manufacturers to make a single run by coloring the plastic with the application of new enamel in many colors.

Gardens

After winter garden plants are up to a stand, a light application of nitrate of soda will help them grow. For quickest results, dissolve a heavy tablespoonful of soda in a gallon of water and pour it along the row. A teacupfull of soda to 100 feet of row will be enough.

Why 365 Days?

All because of a river, there are 365 days in a year. When the ancient Egyptians made the first calendar about 4241 B. C., as a means of measuring time from the moon and sun, they decided to reckon a year by the 365 days between the highest points of the Nile flood.

Medicine Cabinet

It is easy for the medicine chest to become soiled and spotted. Naturally it is important to keep it in perfect sanitary condition. Quick-drying enamel will renew it and make it a colorful asset in the bathroom's scheme of decoration.

"King of Timber"

In Africa there are many tribal names for the wood which we know as mahogany. The most common is "Oganwo" which means "King of Timber" and this may well be the original name from which our word mahogany is derived.

Protein for Pigs

A good protein supplement for use in dry lot feeding can be made by mixing equal parts of tankage, cottonseed meal, finely ground legume hay, and either peanut or soybean meal.

Bald Eagle

The mature bald eagle has a pure white head, neck, and tail, as well as white tail-coverts (special feathers covering the bases of quills). The rest of the plumage is dusty brown.

Britain Wild Oxen

Chillingham cattle are a breed of cattle preserved in the park of the Earl of Tankerville, supposed to be the last remnant of the wild oxen of Britain.

Rugs from Stockings

If plans are being made to crochet rugs from old silk stockings, cut them straight across into rings and then link them together. This trick does away with all the sewing.

Started Boy Scouts

Mt. Beard, a peak near Mt. McKinley in Alaska, was named after Daniel Carter Beard, who started the Boy Scout movement in America. Beard was born June 21, 1850.

Ringing Pigs

When rings are placed in the snouts of pigs, room should be left for growth of the snout. Rings set too deep will cut into the flesh as the nose grows, causing irritation.

London Tea Tasters

Tea tasters in a London importing house work all day smelling, tasting, and feeling samples of ground tea. At 4 o'clock, they pause briefly—for their afternoon tea.

Horses

Horses being wintered mainly on coarse roughage are easy victims of digestive disorders, especially if their drinking water is icy cold.

Apple Stuffing

Apple stuffing may be used between pairs of spare ribs, in a boned shoulder of fresh pork, or in a roast duck.

Calves

Calves born after a long, hard winter may average 10 to 12 pounds less than those born in a normal year.

Livestock Rations

Balanced rations pay dividends in disease control and higher market value of livestock.

Trichomoniasis

Trichomoniasis, a bovine venereal disease that causes abortion, can be spread to cows through artificial insemination.

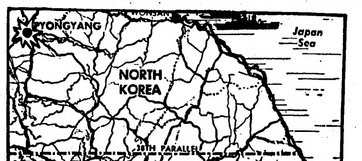
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Probers Charge Illegal Influence Exerted to Obtain R. F. C. Loans; Troops to Europe Fight Continues

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



The United Nations launched an offensive on a 60-mile front in Korea aimed at killing as many Communists as possible. The offensive, called "Operation Killer," moved forward behind continued artillery barrages. U.N. commanders reported Red forces retreated all along the line and set their losses at 64,000 in the period January 4 to February 28.

R.F.C.:

Illegal Influence

What may turn into one of the rowdiest battles in the administration's history began to take shape when a subcommittee of the senate banking and currency committee charged that influence emanating from the White House had been exerted on the R.F.C.'s lending policies.

At first the investigation seemed just another periodic urge to probe by investigating senators. But then President Truman stepped in where many Presidents have feared to tread and disclosed he had collected a file of letters written by congressmen to the R.F.C.

He let it be known that he had in his possession between 700 and 900 letters, most of them from congressmen, and some asking favorable consideration of loan applications.

At the time it looked like President Truman was turning the investigation from the White House back to the senators themselves. Immediately the senators screamed that they refused to be intimidated.

It was at this point that the President issued a statement saying he saw no reason to make the correspondence public since it did not show any illegality either on the part of the executive branch or legislators.

The investigation fell into something of a lull after the first flurry of publicity, but it is not likely to stay dormant for very long. It has all the ingredients for a mud-slinging battle. And the offended senators are not likely to forget Truman's tactics of turning the spotlight of publicity upon them.

Moreover, it appears that before the fight is ended a set of new, deep resentments between the President on the one hand and influential members of congress on the other will have been created—the latest in a long and bitter series.

FIXER:

Faces Huge Tax Lien

Salvatore T. Sollazzo, who allegedly spent thousands to fix big-time college basketball games, found himself the subject of an investigation by the federal government. The internal revenue bureau placed a $1,128,493 tax lien against him.

The effect of the lien was to freeze Sollazzo's assets until the government can collect whatever it may be entitled to. The lien listed allegedly unpaid taxes running into hundreds of thousands of dollars for each of the years from 1943 through 1947.

There was no indication from the government as to the source of Sollazzo's income during those years. He is a jewelry manufacturer.

Meanwhile, investigation of the bribery charges against players for three New York colleges continued. No investigation in recent years has caused so much comment in the sports world.

Basketball is the most popular high school and college sport in the nation. Repercussions of the investigation were felt even to the high school level.

BACK EUROPE:

Dewey and Stassen Plea

The split within the Republican party on the issue of sending troops to Europe came into sharp focus with testimony of Harold E. Stassen and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey before the senate foreign relations and armed services committees.

Dewey had previously backed the administration's policy of sending troops to Europe. Stassen joined Dewey in opposing Sens. Kenneth S. Wherry, Nebraska, and Robert A. Taft, Ohio, and supporting the administrations claimed authority to send American troops overseas without congressional restrictions.

In urging the policy of sending troops to Europe, Stassen said: "If America showed timidity and shortsightedness in refusing to back up General Eisenhower, I believe the reaction right inside America would seriously undermine the stability and confidence in our own economy which is essential for all purposes."

Governor Dewey went even further than Stassen. He told the senate groups, as he looked at Mr. Wherry across 20 feet of space in the caucus room:

"The most terrible thing that has happened to this country and the world is the defeatism evidenced by some of the questions asked here as to whether we could hold Europe."

Dewey and Stassen visibly angered some Republican senators by their testimony. That anger will possibly find expression when the Republicans begin a serious search for a presidential candidate in 1952.

As far as sending troops to Europe and backing Gen. Eisenhower's plan to defend Europe, the congress finds itself in a position where it can do nothing but back the administration. Any action to the contrary would be a serious blow to world peace.

AMENDMENT:

Two Term Limit

The 22nd amendment, baring future Presidents from serving more than two elective terms or more than 10 years in the White House, was added to the constitution when Utah and Nevada became the 35th and 36th states to ratify the amendment. A three-fourths majority, 36 states, was needed to make the amendment effective.

Minus the legal phraseology, here's what the amendment provides:

That a President may serve only two elected terms. A man who served up to two years of another President's unexpired term could still serve an additional eight years.

But a Vice-President succeeding to the Presidency and serving more than two years before the term expired would be eligible for election only once.

The proposed amendment had been kicking around in state legislatures since March, 1947, but only 24 states had voted to ratify until late in January of this year.

The amendment does not apply to President Truman. He was specifically exempted when congress submitted the proposed amendment.

The last amendment to the constitution — the 21st — repealed prohibition. It became effective December 5, 1933.

"DON'T BLAME US"

American Farmer Is on the Defensive

The American farmer is angry. He is on the defensive and he doesn't like it.

Since the government ordered price controls the farmer has been attacked with the charge that he is the "hog" in the high food price picture. And to make matters worse, there appears no way for the farmer to convince the consumer that he is not getting the big cut in higher food prices.

A number of farm editors in the midwest advise housewives to stop buying meat if they want to cut prices. They say the farmer is not getting the major share of the increase; that it is going to packers, wholesalers, processors, retailers and others. This view is widely shared through the midwest farm belt.

A safe way to iron a pair of unwashable men's trousers is to cover them with newspaper and use the iron on top of that. That way there's no need to wait for the pants to dry because they haven't really been steamed. If the trousers are shiny, try using a pressing cloth that's been dipped in bluing water and wrung out.

World War I Vet Praises Hadacol

HADACOL Supplies Vitamins B¹, B², Niacin and Iron Which His System Lacked

This little space is to be read by those folks who are always wishing they'd feel better. Now this business of wishing for "this" and wishing for "that" is all right. It sort of makes a person look to the future. But it is a mighty sorry state of affairs when folks keep wishing and wishing they would feel better. That just doesn't get the job done. Take Leo D. Fisher, 901 Charles Street, St. Joseph, Missouri, for example. He just didn't wish he would feel better — he did something about it. He took HADACOL, and says he feels just fine for Mr. Fisher found that taking HADACOL helped his system overcome deficiencies of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron, which HADACOL contains.

Here is Mr. Fisher's own statement: "I am a veteran of World War I. I have had stomach distress and was nervous and could not sleep. I had no appetite and could not eat any fried foods. I started taking HADACOL. I have taken 8 small bottles and now I am on my second large bottle. I eat anything. I feel fine and sleep good, thanks to HADACOL. I have recommended HADACOL to many people and they are taking it. I am a booster, for I cannot do without it."

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 hospital economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied. —Adv.

FEEN-A-MINT
FAMOUS CHEWING-GUM LAXATIVE

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Sheriff Poole launches an investigation into the death of Anne Delahay who was killed by a falling boulder while on a swimming party with Stella Moore, who is posing as Dorinda LaCroix in the Thorndyke home. Stella was hired by Edward Thorndyke, to perform the hoax because, he said, it might be fatal to grandmother Thorndyke to learn that the real Dorinda is dead. But Mrs. Thorndyke learns the truth and dies of what is believed to have been a heart attack. Dorinda found lipstick traces on the old lady's pillow and feared she might have been murdered. There is a feeling that whoever pushed the boulder might have been trying to kill Dorinda, mistaking Anne for her.

CHAPTER XIII

"A regrettable accident occurred—" Edward began but the sheriff interposed quickly.

"Something occurred which appeared to be an accident. We're not certain that it was."

"But what happened?" Carol asked again. "Was anyone hurt?"

"A friend of Dorinda's was killed," Edward told her. "I don't think you know her, Carol. There was a miniature landslide at the bluff. Miss Delahay was struck by a falling boulder."

"A friend of Dorinda's." Her eyes turned to Dorinda in quick sympathy. "But how terrible for you! Oh, I wish I hadn't gone away. Maybe there was something I could have done."

"There was nothing anyone could have done," Dorinda said dully.

Poole crossed the hall to the foot of the stair. He stopped in front of the girl who sat there, looking down at her.

"You haven't thought of anything else?" he asked.

She shook her head.

"Rather an odd thing happened," he went on thoughtfully. "Yesterday, it seems that Johnny Heffner, who makes deliveries for McGregor's, was out this way at about the time Miss Delahay was killed. He saw a girl walking along the road just outside the place. He thought she turned in at the gate although he had passed the house by that time. He took this girl to be you. You weren't outside any time during the afternoon?"

"I didn't come up from the beach at all until—" Dorinda stopped, her mouth tightening.

"That's what I understood. Queer, how a girl with yellow hair—who couldn't possibly be you according to your friends and relatives—keeps bobbing up. You remember there was a yellow-haired girl with Taylor just before he had his accident."

"That's what Mr. Hawley told us."

Fay Discovers Dorinda Is Keeping Door Locked

"And now she shows up again. Miss LaCroix, you told me yesterday that you saw something yellow at the top of the bluff. Think hard, now, could that something have been a glimpse of someone's yellow hair?"

Dorinda hesitated. "I don't know," she said slowly. "I think—it could have been. I didn't see anyone but if she, that girl, had been crouched down behind the wall with just a little of her hair showing—I couldn't be sure."

Poole's lips thinned to a straight line. "It begins to look as if this accident wasn't so accidental after all." There was a certain satisfaction in his tone.

"What are you talking about?" Edward demanded sharply. "What's all this about Dorinda seeing yellow? It's the first I've heard of it." His face was crumpled by some inner agitation. "Mr. Poole, my niece is a nervous, imaginative girl. I hope you'll not let anything she may have fancied she saw, at a time when she certainly must have been in a more or less hysterical state, influence you."

Poole fumbled with his cigarette papers. He glanced at Edward obliquely from under dust-colored brows. "H'm, your niece may be imaginative—but there's certainly a few things about this affair that can't be laid to imagination. She didn't imagine the girl at The Silver Slipper. She didn't imagine the girl who turned in at your gate yesterday."

Edward moistened his dry lips with the tip of his tongue. "Surely, Sheriff, you can't pay attention to such trifles. I know nothing about the girl at the roadhouse. But as to such a person coming in here—after all, your delivery boy didn't actually see her enter the gate. And if he did see anyone, it was probably Dorinda herself. Possibly she has forgotten."

Poole's lips quirked. "Cleve Adams must have forgotten as well, then. He seems quite certain she was with him all afternoon." His voice changed suddenly. "You seem very anxious, Mr. Thorndyke, that this affair should be considered an accident. Surely, if someone deliberately pushed that boulder over the bluff, you want us to find out who it was."

Fay's blue eyes had darkened. "I'm beginning to think things are rather strange around here myself," she observed dubiously.

"Nonsense!" Edward barked. He looked at Dorinda, his eyes hard with suppressed anger. He opened his lips as if to speak, then turned and strode back into the living room without a word.

Carol started up the stair. "Come on up," she whispered to Dorinda as she passed her, and, with a glance at Fay who stood looking after Edward, the girl followed the nurse up the steps.

"I want to know more about this," Carol said as they came into the upper hall. "If you'll wait for me in your room until I change, I'll be with you."

In ten minutes Carol knocked softly and came in, wearing a red-and-white printed house coat, a red ribbon holding back the dark curls from her face.

So Dorinda told her. It seemed she almost knew the story by heart now she had told it so often. When she had finished, Carol sat silent for a few minutes, her dark face thoughtful. Then she rose and paced up and down the room, puffing furiously at her cigarette.

"It doesn't seem as if it could be anything except an accident," she commented, returning to her chair. "But I don't like it. I suppose I'll have to stay a day or two longer . . ." She shivered. "But let's look out for accidents."

Poole looked down at Dorinda.

She did not see Carol again. Lana had already departed in her car. Edward and Fay she met only at dinner, where Edward maintained an unbroken silence, and Fay, too, ignored her. Harriet was quiet as well, seemingly absorbed in some deep study of her own.

Fay did speak to Dorinda though as the girl excused herself from the table and was about to leave the dining room.

"I didn't know you locked your door at night, Dorinda. I can understand you were upset after what happened here yesterday but surely you're not afraid of anything—or anyone — right here in the house?"

"Why, how did you know?"

"Greer told us about your friend and I thought I'd come and speak to you. It wasn't late when we came home, not much after ten. But your door was fastened and I thought you must be asleep."

Dorinda's Dog Randy Suddenly Disappears

"I was—almost." She wouldn't tell Fay how frightened she had been.

She spent the evening in her room, trying to read.

Carrie came up at nine-thirty with her hot milk. "You look ghastly, Miss. You'd better go to bed," she said commiseratingly.

So, soon after her departure, Dorinda undressed. After a moment's hesitation, she picked up the little envelope which had been left on the bedside table and shook two more of the small tablets into her glass of milk. She had to sleep, she had to forget. For a few hours at least.

But, before she had time to drink it, there was a knock. Greer's voice reached her from beyond the panled door.

"Mr. Adams is on the phone, Miss Dorinda. I didn't know whether you'd retired or not."

"Oh, ask him to wait, please. I'll be right down."

She slipped on a robe over her thin night dress. Randy was watching her, his black eyes wide awake. "Be a good pup." She shut the door carefully behind her and went downstairs.

"Hello, Dorinda, are you all right?" Cleve sounded anxious. "Poole was here just a little while ago. He's all worked up over this business, and darn it, he's almost got me thinking that there's more to it than meets the eye. I don't believe it—not really—but I'm uneasy. I had to call you and be sure everything was okay with you."

"Of course, I'm all right, Cleve," she said. "But I'm glad you called. I've been blue and lonesome. And I think Uncle Edward is angry with me for talking so much—about what I saw at the top of the bluff. But it was true, Cleve."

They talked for a quarter of an hour longer and then Cleve dismissed her summarily with the words, "Go on to bed, sweet. Good-by until tomorrow."

She opened the door of her room, bracing herself against Randy's probable onslaught. But no small dog leaped forward to meet her. And then she saw a stream of spilled milk across the rug and the overturned glass. He'd been a bad dog, she thought, and was hiding from her. She called to him softly but he did not come. She looked under the bed, behind the chairs, even opened the door of the closet and looked inside.

He wasn't under the bed or behind the chairs, he wasn't in the closet, he wasn't in the room. She had left him here, shut in securely, but Randy was gone.

Carol came to the door at Dorinda's knock, her dark hair tumbled about her face, her eyes heavy with sleep.

"No, I haven't seen your dog," she declared in response to Dorinda's inquiry. "I wouldn't worry. He's around somewhere. Probably he felt guilty after spilling your milk and when someone opened your door, he darted out and hid."

"He isn't so afraid of me he'd do that."

"Well, maybe he ran out to look for you." Carol's face brightened with a sudden thought. "You said you'd dissolved your sleeping tablets in the milk—I don't know what they are or what effect they'd have on an animal, but if he drank any amount of it he's probably curled up asleep somewhere."

Both Fay and Edward, still down in the living room, denied having seen Randy. Greer, who had been in the hall all the time Dorinda was absent from her room, declared the little dog hadn't come down the stairs. Though, of course, there were the back stairs.

Dorinda Has Strange Experience in Attic

Dorinda went to bed with a heavy heart. Waking in the night, she would find herself listening for Randy's impatient bark outside the door. Once she got up and looked into the dimly lit hall. But he was not in sight.

Carrie came to her in the morning while Dorinda was dressing. "I haven't seen him anywhere," she said soberly. "I think he must have got outside someway. Could be he's gone back where he came from."

"You shouldn't have anything to do with me, Carrie," Dorinda declared. "Everything — everyone that comes near me meets with trouble." She blinked back the tears.

"Now, Miss, I wouldn't say that. But someone in the house did let your dog out. No getting away from that. I asked Mr. Greer this morning and he said he thought Mr. Edward and Miss Fay were in the living room all the time you were downstairs, but either one of 'em could have gone through the dining room to the kitchen and up the backstairs. Though I can't think why they'd do that."

"Randy didn't bother anyone," the girl choked. "If he's gone—"

"Don't feel so bad, Miss. Mr. Cleve'll give you another dog."

Dorinda shook her head. "I don't want another one. It wouldn't be the same. Besides, I'd be afraid something might happen again."

Dorinda could not believe he had wandered away. After breakfast, she searched desolately through the house again, trying to think of some spot she had overlooked. Last night she and Carrie had gone over the basement and even the outside garages. But there was one place they hadn't searched—the big attic which covered the spreading house like a cap.

Carrie had tried the door and found it locked. "Well, it's no use looking up there," she asserted. "Mr. Greer has the only key to that door. And even your Randy, smart as he is, couldn't crawl through a keyhole."

"Seems queer, locking up an attic." Dorinda had to try the door herself before she was satisfied. "Why do they do it?"

"Oh, years ago Mrs. Thorndyke found one of the maids taking her boy friend up there on the sly. So she ordered the door be kept locked and I guess it just got to be a habit. There's nothing worth anything up there."

But, Dorinda thought now, it was the one place they hadn't gone. Randy could only be there if someone had shut him up deliberately.

Greer was polishing silver in the butler's pantry when she told him what she wanted. He detached the key to the attic door from his heavy key ring but hesitated before he handed it to her.

"Wouldn't you like me to look for you, Miss Dorinda?" he asked. "It's pretty dusty in the attic, I'm afraid. And I'm quite sure your little dog couldn't be there."

Paint Under Side Too

When building new wooden porch steps or replacing parts of old ones, it is advisable to paint the under sides of the stringers, risers and treads. This is especially important where moisture is frequently present as it will prevent the paint on the upper surface from blistering.

OPEN CENTER OR TRACTION CENTER

Firestone

FOR spring plowing in soft ground you need a tire that stays clean . . . For fall work in hard ground you want one that bites through and takes hold . . . And for any kind of work any day in the year, you'll find that a Firestone Champion beats them all.

Which Champion? . . . Either one, but let the soil conditions on your farm determine whether the Open Center or the Traction Center is best for you. Both tires give you these extra traction features—

★ Curved bars to cup the soil for a sure, firm hold.

★ Extra bar height for deeper soil penetration.

★ Extra bar length for bigger soil bite.

★ Flared Tread Openings for positive cleaning action.

Only Firestone gives you all these—and many more—features. Only Firestone gives you top traction performance in the tire of your choice—Open Center or Traction Center.

Crop Rotation Needs Help From Well Fed Deep-Rooted Legumes

CHICAGO—Depending on a crop rotation alone to build your soil and keep up its crop producing vigor, is like trying to run your tractor without motor fuel or oil, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"Valuable as a good rotation is in balancing soil-building legume crops against soil-robbing row crops," says the statement, "it has to have help in the form of wise management methods. Cropping even in the best rotation drains the soil's supply of phosphate and potash.

"And even if you put back every scrap of barnyard manure, plow under deep-rooted legumes and return corn stalks, straw and other crop aftermath to the soil, you still ship away hundreds of pounds of plant food in the grain, beef and milk you sell every year.

"These nutrients must be replaced if you are to build your soil and maintain high yields at a low output cost. Soil scientists recommend that plenty of phosphate and potash be applied with seedings of sweet clover, alfalfa and grass mixtures. Such management best helps the soil to help itself.

"When deep-rooted legumes are well fed and limed they will give you thick stands and strong roots. They will provide a protective cover that slows down water runoff. And when you save water, you also save nitrogen, phosphate, potash and organic matter."

Watch Out For The "Blind-Spots"

Stopped by Squint Miller's farm the other day and saw a vinegar bottle in his kitchen with an oversized cucumber inside it. The cucumber filled the whole bottle.

"What's a cucumber doing in there?" I asked him. "That's my 'blind-spot' reminder," says Squint. "My grandmother kept one in her kitchen to remind her to take stock of herself now and then.

"I slipped that bottle over the cucumber when it was just starting to grow on the vine," he went on. "And like certain viewpoints, not noticed, it just grew and grew—now it's there to stay."

From where I sit, we could take a cue from Squint and watch for our own "blind-spots" and prejudices before they grow too big to get rid of. We've got to respect our neighbor's right to his preferences ... preferences for a certain make of car, a favorite movie star, or a temperate glass of beer after work. We won't be tripped by any blind spots if we keep our eyes—and minds—open!

Railroad Safety

During the year 1947 there were fewer fatalities on United States railroads than in any other year on record. The previous low in that respect was in 1939 when traffic, measured in ton-miles and passenger-miles, was only one-half as great as in 1947. Nonfatal injuries, on the other hand, were considerably greater than the 1939 total, though not so numerous as in the war years, when freight and passenger traffic was at peak levels. Comparing 1947 with 1946, total fatalities to all classes of persons numbered 4,186, a reduction of 176 or 4.0 per cent under 1946. Nonfatal injuries numbered 48,780 in 1947, a reduction of 3,227 or 66.2 per cent under 1946.

Lonely Isles

The remote British islands of Tristan da Cunha, in the far South Atlantic, are known as the "lonely isles." World War I was nearly over before news of its outbreak reached inhabitants of these islands. Years passed before the islanders heard of the armistice. By contrast, it was through World War II that Tristan da Cunha began losing its isolation. In 1942, a secret meteorlogical and radio station was set up there by the British royal navy and the South African air force.

Oration To A Cow

Emphasis have been on the cow the past weeks at our creamery meetings. The following is an Oration To A Cow by Col. F. M. Wood.

"Grand old noble brute, of all the animal friends of man, you are the greatest. To you we owe the most. Examine into all the different channels of our commerce and note the result, should she be blotted out. A Sunday stillness would then prevail in the great stock industries of our cities, and grass would grow in the streets.

"Our tables would be bare of the greatest luxuries with which they are now covered. Oh, you, who would abuse the cow, I wish that I could, as you are about to sit down to your noonday meal, step up and remove from the table that which the cow has placed thereon. I would take the cup of milk that is waiting by the baby's chair. I would take the cream biscuits, the steak, the smoking roast beef and leave you make a meal of potatoes, beet pickles and toothpicks.

"It is the selfsame cow that has made the western plains to bloom like the roses. and were it not for her, they would revert to the Indians, from whence they came. None other like the cow. There is not a thing from nose to tail, but what is utilized for the use of man. We use her horns to comb our hair, her skin upon our feet, her hairs keep our plaster upon the walls, her hoofs make glue, her tail makes soup, she gives us her milk, our cream, our cheese and our butter, and her flesh is the greatest meat of all nations. Her blood is used to make our sugar white and her bones are ground to fertilize our soil. No other animal works for man both day and night. By day she gathers food and at night when we are asleep she brings it back to re-chew and to convert into all the things of which I speak.

"She has gone with man from Plymouth Rock to the setting sun. It was her sons that turned the first soil in the settlers clearing. It was her sons that drew the prairie schooner for the sturdy pioneers, as inch by inch they sought to prove that ,,Westward the star of the empire takes its way,' and the old cow grazed along behind. When the day's march was done, she came and gave the milk to fill the mother's breast to feed the suckling babe that was, perchance, to become the ruler of this country. Who says that much of what we are, we do not owe to man's best friend, the COW? Treat her kindly, gently, for without her words fail to describe." Col. Fred Reppert. "Reppert's Correspondence Course of Auctioneering in Ten Lessons-". pp-81-82

County Gets Payment from State

Obligations of the State of Minnesota in the conservation area of Marshall county were cleared up last Saturday upon receipt of a state warrant of $168,085.33 by Levi G. Johnson, county auditor, from Stafford King, state auditor.

The huge payment was made as a result of special legislation enacted during the 1949 session of the Legislation over Governor Youngdahl's veto. The legislation was carried through the senate by Senator Donald Sinclair and the house by Representative Emil Morberg.

A. A. Trost, who was serving as county attorney at the time, and Sofus Bjertness, county commissioner from the 5th district, represented the county. They made numerous trips to St. Paul to confer with Auditor King, officials of the conservation department, the public examiner department. attorney general department and legislators to secure enactment of the enabling law permitting the repayment to the county.

The state's obligation to Marshall county totaled $918,976.56, while under the law establishing the Conservation Area in 1933 the state paid up $750,891.23 covering the ditch leins.

The $168,085.33 payment represents bonds that Marshall county had taken up through several refunding bond issues for nonpayment of ditch leins. Regular payments on these bonds were made, as they were general obligations of the county, but covered ditch liens in the Conservation area. These certificates had been held by Auditor King, who was of the opinion that they should be paid back to the county, and who aided the county in securing legislation which authorized him to refund this money to the county.

County board members are authorized to use the new funds for general purposes of the entire county with the exception of some money which must be used in some of the ditch funds in the area.

Labor's Recent Revolt Called Open Warfare on Truman Administration

LABOR IN REVOLT—The Truman administration has had many and varied difficulties in its history, but few of them ever approached the seriousness of labor's recent revolt against the government's mobilization effort. The decision of labor to withdraw from the wage stabilization board and other government agencies amounted to a declaration of war on the Truman administration.

The united labor policy committee, composed of 14 top officials of the C.I.O. and A.F.L., ordered the withdrawal. As a result, labor men resigned from 24 advisory posts and other positions in defense agencies including the military.

MAIN STREET FEATURE

Labor made it clear that it felt "big business" dominated the mobilization effort, and that the several labor men in top federal jobs were used merely as "window dressing." The charge of "big business" was directed at Charles E. Wilson, director of the office of defense mobilization, who ignored labor when he first took office.

Labor was especially bitter about the 10 per cent wage formula as recommended by economic stabilizer Eric Johnston. The union leaders were not pacified when Johnston exempted from the wage ceiling all cost-of-living escalator clauses in union contracts written before January 25.

These grievances were serious enough in themselves, but there seemed to be other motivating facts behind labor's revolt. Hidden behind the curtains of petty disagreements was the fear of a labor draft during the present crisis, the same fear that labor struggled against during World War II.

In the interest of mobilization and the well-being of the nation, peace between the administration and labor has become a pressing, desperate need.

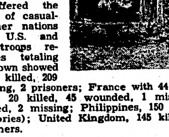
HOUSEWIVES' DISTASTE—It has been said by critics of this country that the United States is ruled by women, that our economy and way of life centers around the wives, sweethearts, daughters, sisters and mothers of the nation.

An example of the woman's influence on the nation's economy was reflected in the meat markets of the nation when housewives' distaste of costly cuts of beef caused some real price roll-backs.

A nation-wide canvas revealed that prices were cut from 10 to 25 per cent on the more expensive cuts of meat. And in every case, the price-cutters declared housewives' lack of relish for high red meat prices was the main reason for their action. There was evidence, too, that this trend might continue since meat supplies are abundant and getting more so. The agricultural department is on record as saying "prospects are for a larger meat production in 1951 than in 1950."

Meanwhile, the agriculture department had other interesting statistics for the general public, namely, farm-product prices climbed to a record level in February. The figures revealed that prices paid farmers for all their commodities was 2.25 per cent higher than the old record set in January, 1948, and about 26 per cent above the level prevailing before the Korean war.

However, despite the high level of the farm commodity market, only nine major products were selling at or above parity—the price standard declared by law to be equally fair to farmers and those who buy their products. The products above parity were beef cattle, veal calves, lambs, sheep, cotton, cotton seed, wool, rice and soybeans. Such products as wheat, corn, peanuts, potatoes, butterfat, milk, oats, barley, rye, flaxseed, grain sorghums, dry beans, citrus fruits, apples, sweet potatoes, chickens, and eggs were bringing less than parity prices.



CASUALTIES TOTAL 50,675—The people of the cities, home towns and crossroads of the nation were beginning to feel the full force of the Korean conflict. Every day families in communities across the nation were being notified of casualties of war. The latest summary listed 50,675 wounded, missing or killed in action. Of this total, 7,639 were reported killed, 33,041 wounded and 9,635 missing. And while American troops had suffered the greatest number of casualties, the 10 other nations fighting beside U.S. and South Korean troops reported casualties totaling 2,813. The breakdown showed Australia with 48 killed, 209 wounded, 6 missing, 2 prisoners; France with 44 killed, 201 wounded, 3 missing; Greece, 20 killed, 45 wounded, 1 missing; Netherlands, 24 killed, 76 wounded, 2 missing; Philippines, 150 casualties (not broken down into categories); United Kingdom, 145 killed, 442 wounded, 244 missing, 61 prisoners.

WATCHFUL WORLD—As deputy foreign ministers of France, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States met in Paris in an attempt to work out an agenda for a big-four conference, a watchful, but pessimistic world waited for announcement of first results.

Considerable doubt existed as to whether or not even an agreement on an agenda could be reached among the four nations. The Soviet Union indicated it would stress the German problem and charge the western powers with rearming western Germany. On the other hand, the United States announced it would direct the discussion to the vast build-up of arms in the Soviet Union and its eastern European satellites, and argue that those arms are the basic cause of the world's ills.

It was believed doubtful, therefore, that the big four could even agree on a list of subjects about which the big-four could talk with any hope of success.

It was also reported the United States would try to put the settlement of an Austrian peace treaty on the agenda, an achievement long sought by this government, but continually blocked by the Soviet Union.

Even if the deputy foreign ministers could reach agreement on an agenda, there exists little hope that the big-four can reach any settlement of the world's ills that will materially decrease the possibility of open conflict in the immediate future.

SPRING OFFENSIVE—The threat of a big spring counteroffensive by the Chinese Communists still hung over the Korean front as United Nations troops continued their push northward. Heavy movements of troops were reported at several points behind the Red lines.

Increasing numbers of Communist trucks were reported moving south into Seoul and the Reds stepped up night mortar and artillery fire from the old South Korean capital. There were also indications that a new Chinese division may have been moved into Korea in preparation for the expected offensive.

Frontline observers pointed out that the Chinese have switched from night to day operations, usually a sign of desperation. There was no indication, however, that either side could chop out a clear-cut victory that might terminate hostilities. It remains a battle of Chinese manpower vs American firepower.

REDS DECLINE IN EUROPE—An indication that the Communists are losing the battle to take over western Europe by boring from within was revealed in a state department report that said the party had lost a third—1,295,000—of its members in the west since World War II.

The report said there were 1,673,002 Communist party members in western Europe (except Italy) in 1946, and 2,300,000 in Italy in 1948—a total of 3,973,000. The number dropped to 2,678,000 in 1950.

ATOMIC BOMB

Scientist Says It Could Destroy Russia

The often questioned power of the atomic bomb was given a shot in the arm by one of the nation's leading scientists recently when he asserted that American atomic bombs "would destroy Russia" if the Soviets started war in Europe now.

Dr. Vannevar Bush, president of Carnegie Institute of Washington, one of the codevelopers of the atom bomb, said: "We could destroy not only the key centers from which her (Russia) armies would be supplied, but also political centers and the communications of her armies on the march. Initially equipped with weapons and supplies, those armies might keep rolling for a time, but there would be no Soviet Union behind them as we know it at the present time."

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

Did You Know . . .?

The owl cannot move its eyes in their sockets but compensates by being able to rotate its head in a large arc of 273 degrees? Like other birds, the owl possesses good color vision. . . . The world's largest sheep, the Argali, lands on his horns instead of his feet, when he jumps? . . . The troublesome English "sparrow" is not a sparrow at all? He is a member of the weaver bird family of Europe. . . . "Heifer" is the modern spelling of two Anglo-Saxon words, head-fear, meaning "high ox," as the heifer seems to stand up extraordinarily high on her legs compared to a grown cow. . . . Tiny green plants called algae grow on the fur of the sloth, a South American animal that lives in trees? These plants provide camouflage for the sloth. . . . There are more than 7,000 different kinds of ants? . . . Naturalists who want to capture a snake uninjured may kill him with tobacco? They pin him down with a forked stick, push up his jaws and stuff tobacco down his throat with a twig. Tossed at the base of a tree as a landmark, he is picked up dead on the return trip. . . . Ducks die from eating bird shot? Spent shot that settles in feeding swamps may be swallowed by the ducks. Lead shot in the crop of a duck will cause its death from lead poisoning. . . . In dry climates meat is preserved simply by hanging it out to dry? This is the common method of making jerked venison or "jerky." . . . There is a legend that animals kneel to worship on Christmas Eve?

Education Needed

The average citizen must be brought to realize that the management of wildlife is no clear simple matter, that we are treating a living resource that is subject to a variety of influences, that only the most careful kind of management based on sound research findings can ever hope to provide the answer to our problem. The so-called "one gallus" hunter and fisherman must be brought to a point where he will voluntarily accept the findings and recommendations of his wildlife commission as to the management of the wildlife resource. This must be done, otherwise what excuse do we have for the existence of wildlife training schools, research units, laboratories, experiment stations, and scores of trained men who have given themselves years of professional training in the wildlife field?

This type of acceptance of the wildlife agency by the layman will not come by itself. There must be efficient wildlife administration, continued good research, intelligent dissemination of accurate information. long-range educational work, and a co-ordinated, good, public relations program.

In speaking of youth, here lies our very greatest hope in conservation education. It was Goethe who said that the destiny of any nation at any given time depends on the opinions of its youth. To be more specific, "it's young men under five and twenty."

△ △ △

Yeah, Why?

The United States is fighting Communist aggression with men, guns and planes in Korea, but on the other hand it continues to develop its trade with Russia, the birthplace of Communism.

Whenever Communists anywhere, whether they be the armies of North Korea or Red China or saboteurs in the United States, commit acts of aggression, it is an acknowledged fact that they do so under the leadership of Russia, and with Russia's full blessing.

When the United States continues normal trade relations with Russia, it is building up that country's dollar reserve so that it can better finance the Communist's disruptive tactics against the free nations of the world. Senator Milton Young has attempted to cut down the flow of dollars to Russia by introducing a bill to prohibit the importation of furs from Russia. He says this nation imports $59 million worth of raw furs per year from that fountainhead of Communism.

However, the U.S. tariff commission opposes the senator's bill, contending that the Russian furs do not compete to any great extent with American furs. We don't think the tariff commission is on sound ground when it makes this claim. While Russian furs may not be made from the same kind of animals that are the fur producers for the American market, to American womanhood a fur coat is a fur coat.

Sinking A Leader

There is hardly anything more pestiferous to the fly fisherman than a leader which won't sink when it should. For this aggravation there is always the fundamental answer of rubbing it with bankside mud.

To meet the problem in a more convenient, refined way, one may take along a bit of some abrasive soap, such as lava, for instance, and rub the leader with this. It will do the job.

Painter Feels Good Again

HADACOL Supplies Vitamins B¹, B², Niacin and Iron Which His System Lacked

When a man works hard all day, he has to get a good night's sleep in order to keep going. Take Mr. Tony Wesalick of 1010 Tabor St., Houston, Texas, for example. Up until a few months ago Mr. Wesalick just couldn't sleep, had no appetite, and was bothered with indigestion. Then he heard about HADACOL and started taking it. A painter by profession, Mr. Wesalick says that now he gets up in the morning feeling so rested, and so full of energy that he's almost never tired any more. He eats everything he wants without being troubled with indigestion, and has a wonderful appetite since HADACOL helped overcome his deficiencies of Vitamins B¹, B², Niacin and Iron.

Here is Mr. Wesalick's own statement: "I was run-down and I would get up in the morning feeling as if I hadn't slept at all. My appetite was bad, and I just didn't feel like eating, and when I did eat I had terrible indigestion. After a bottle and a half of HADACOL I felt much better. I have now taken about five more bottles of HADACOL and can eat and enjoy everything I want. I sleep much better and feel more rested. HADACOL has done this for me."

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 hospital economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied. —Adv.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Stella Moore, masquerading as Dorinda LaCroix in the old Thorndyke mansion, is keeping her door locked after a salesman recognized her. Grandmother Thorndyke and Stella's friend, Anne Delahay, all have met death under mysterious circumstances. Randy, a pup given her by a neighbor, Cleve Adams, for whom Stella has formed a romantic attachment, has disappeared and Stella has searched everywhere but in the attic. As she searches there she is conscious of a sense of eerie menace and thinks someone has followed her to the attic. Stella accepted the job of masquerade at the insistence of Edward Thorndyke, son of Mrs. Thorndyke, who did not know the real Dorinda had died.

CHAPTER XIV

Dorinda shook her head. "No, I want to see for myself. I don't think he's there either, but I've looked everywhere else."

Greer handed the key to her without further protest. "Please be sure to return it to me," he cautioned. "It was lost once and Mrs. Thorndyke didn't like it at all. Though we found it later in a drawer of old keys. I never could figure how it got there." He frowned a little, remembering. "So please don't forget to give it back."

As she neared the head of the stairs, she could hear a rhythmic tapping from behind the door opposite Grandmother's old room. Fay, writing the letters which she so often used as an excuse for remaining in her own apartment. Dorinda had seen her typewriter once, an efficient little portable enameled in blue and silver. The typing ceased as Dorinda took the last step, and a moment later the door opened and Fay looked out.

"Oh, it's you, Dorinda. I heard that third step from the top creak —I think it's the only thing that creaks in this solid old house—and thought perhaps it was Edward." Her hand on the knob of her door, she added civilly, "Have you found your dog?"

"No, I'm still looking for him. I'm going up in the attic." She held up the key.

"I wouldn't go up there," Fay declared. "The place is filthy. It's cleaned up once a year but it must be thick with dust now. You'll be a mess if you do much searching."

"It won't hurt to try," Dorinda insisted. "I'll be careful. If I get dirty, I can always clean up."

"Well, it's your funeral." Fay's shoulders moved in a barely perceptible shrug.

Cleve and Dorinda Take Ride into Town

The big attic space was dim and shadowy. The only marks in the whole wide space were some shapeless, scuffing ones which crossed the floor from the top of the stairs and ended at a big leather-covered trunk on the opposite side. Greer, Carrie, anyone might have made them.

She followed them idly and stopped in front of the trunk. About her the piled-up refuse of the house was gray with the fine dust which day after day had sifted in and lain undisturbed for the past year. Only the top of this trunk was clean and free from grime.

That meant nothing—only that someone had added to whatever store the trunk contained, old linen, old garments, anything. She bent and pulled at the lid. It did not open. The trunk was locked.

But suddenly, surprisingly, as if in response to her touch the trunk had become a sentient thing which threatened her, she was enveloped by fear. The trunk? Was it the trunk which caused her terrors? She stumbled toward the stairs and heard footsteps, made audible by haste, on the treads below. Then the soft closing of the door. Someone had been there, someone who had followed without sound and watched.

But when she came down into the upper hall once more, she saw only emptiness. Every door was closed, everything still behind them. As she listened, the clack of Fay's typewriter came to her ears again.

She turned the key carefully in the lock and went along the hall to her room. Half-way there, Harriet's latch clicked and she stepped out into Dorinda's path. The older woman wore a dark blue coat and skirt and blue felt hat. A dotted veil swung in front of her colorless face.

Downstairs, Greer had just opened the front door. Dorinda, on the stairway, could see Cleve as he stood in the white portico and ran to meet him. He took both her hands in his and scrutinized her face carefully.

"What is it, Dorinda?" he asked anxiously, "You're white as a ghost. Nothing—nothing more—has happened, has it?"

"No, except Randy—" She stopped, caught her breath sharply, before she could go on. "Randy is lost. You didn't find him anywhere, did you, Cleve?"

"Randy? No. Did he run away?"

She took Cleve out to the canvas-covered lawn swing under the trees. There she told him of Randy's disappearance, and, after a little hesitation, of the terror she had felt in the attic.

"Maybe someone here didn't like dogs," Cleve suggested. "Didn't like your having him and seized an opportunity to get rid of him. Had you thought of that?"

She nodded. "But I didn't think anyone hated him that much."

"It's hard to think of any other reason for his disappearance. Unless someone accidentally let him out and doesn't want to admit it since he seems to be lost. He may show up yet, honey."

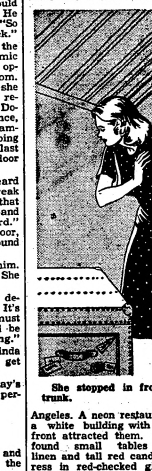
"Maybe." But her voice was without conviction.

"You need to get away from here, Dorinda."

"Tell you what—let's get the car and beat it, now, before lunch. We'll drive around and get dinner somewhere and not come back till late this evening. How's that?"

"Oh, I'd like that!" Dorinda's eyes shone. "Maybe things will seem different if I get away from the house for awhile."

They bought hamburgers and coffee at a roadside stand, food made ambrosia by spring and the appetite of youth. At twilight they came into a small town near Los Angeles. A neon restaurant sign on a white building with a glassed-in front attracted them. Inside they found small tables with snowy linen and tall red candles. A waitress in red-checked gingham and tiny white apron brought them fried chicken, chilled salad, hot biscuits feather-light with crisp brown crust.



She stopped in front of the trunk.

"Fresh air and good company. The combination does wonders for the appetite." Cleve's eyes were warm and teasing. "You see, I admit I'm good company." He drained the last drop of his coffee.

"Let's take a walk around town." he suggested. "Then I'm afraid we'll have to go back."

Edward, Blonde Woman Are Seen by Couple

"I hate to go back." For a second her face was somber. "But I won't think about it. Let's start on that walk."

Cleve caught her arm as she would have stepped down from the curb. "Look out for that machine," he warned as a long black sedan slid toward them.

"Silly, there's a stop sign on the corner. See, they're braking now." Dorinda scoffed, as the black car came to a stop not more than a yard away.

Against the glow of the street lamp across the road, Dorinda could see the driver's face, a dark silhouette, clear as if cut from black paper, and beyond him, catching the first impact of the light, fair hair that lifted gently in the breeze and made a misty golden halo about the head of the woman in the passenger seat.

Dorinda's fingers clutched at Cleve's sleeve as the car, the smooth hum of its motor almost soundless, glided on in the darkness.

"Cleve!" she gasped, the words catching in her throat. "Did you see them? The man who drove — it was Uncle Edward. And there was a woman with him—a woman with yellow hair!"

"Your Uncle Edward!" Cleve repeated. "Are you certain, Dorinda?"

"I know it." There was no doubt in her mind.

"And a blonde woman? Perhaps it was Fay. In this light—"

"Her face was hidden behind his shoulder. But her hair was yellow. Not silver. I could see well enough to know I'm not mistaken about that."

They stood on the curb looking down the road in the direction the car had gone. Even the red taillight had disappeared now.

"Cleve, a yellow-haired woman? You remember what Poole said? At The Silver Slipper—in the road the day Anne—that day—"

"No!" Cleve's voice was loud in the quiet night. "It couldn't be that girl. There'll be some perfectly simple explanation for this. You'll see. Some friend of his we don't know about maybe. Your uncle has always been, according to my mother, what a generation or two ago they called a lady-killer."

"An old-fashioned wolf?" The girl's giggle was half-hysterical and Cleve put his arm about her shoulders in a reassuring pressure.

"Honey, don't go imagining things." But, lifting her eyes to his face, she caught the harassed look which lingered there. Cleve was not as certain of his ground as he would have her believe.

It was not until they were within a few miles of Thorndyke House that he spoke again.

"Dorinda," he said, almost violently. "I hate to take you back there!" After a moment, he went on more calmly, "You and I haven't talked seriously to each other very often. But I want to tell you something about myself. You know I'm going into a law firm in Los Angeles in the early summer. The firm is known as Pierce and Grayson, although Grayson's been dead for some years. Mr. Pierce was an old friend of my dad's—he's been practically another father to me since my own died. The thing is my prospects are more than good with him. In a few years, if our plans work out, I'll be junior partner in the firm.

"Now I've been thinking—you know how I feel about you. Why don't you marry me, as soon as we can manage it, and let me take you away? We won't be able to afford butlers and Cadillacs—not for a long time anyway. But somehow I don't believe you'd care. We'd have enough to be comfortable. Even have a little frosting on our cake. How about it?"

"Marry you?" A surge of joy rose in her breast. And died almost as quickly.

Cleve Warns Dorinda To Be Very Careful

"Marry you?" And now her voice was lost, forlorn. "I can't, Cleve."

She felt the jerk he gave reflected in the movement of the car. He turned his head and stared at her. The dashboard-light showed his face dark, troubled by a bewildered sternness.

"You mean you won't? Then you don't love me?"

"It isn't that. Don't ask me why. Please, not tonight." She could feel tears streaking her cold cheeks.

"You're crying, sweet." He sounded baffled. "All right, I don't understand but I won't say any more tonight."

"Cleve, don't hate me, Cleve."

"Hate you!" He laughed shortly. "I don't think you need worry about that."

He said no more until just before he left her. He had unlocked the front door with the key she gave him and gone with her into the deserted lower hall.

The hands of the grandfather clock set midway of the side wall pointed to twelve. The silvery whir of the chimes began just as they stepped inside. Edward's tan hat and light topcoat hung on the rack. He was, then, home before them. There was another hat there too. A dark blue Homburg with a tiny pheasant feather making a small splotch of color. Whose? The question hardly formed in her mind before she remembered. Grandmother's attorney—Edward had said he was to come Thursday night.

Cleve, his hands on her shoulders, pulled her to him for a moment. "I don't understand you, Dorinda," he said, as he had said once before. "You're not the type to be associated with mystery and there is some mystery connected with you. I believe now that if Anne's death wasn't an accident—although, mind you, I'm not convinced it wasn't — she wasn't intended to be the victim. I spent most of yesterday in Trentville—that's why you didn't see me here—talking to people who knew her. I'll swear she didn't have an enemy in the world. I wouldn't have thought you had but I can't be certain of that without knowing all about you."

He bent his head and kissed her lightly on one cheek. "No," he went on as he met her protesting look, "I'm not going to ask you questions, not tonight. Though sometime"—his jaw set firmly,—"sometime you're going to tell me. And in the meantime, for God's sake, be careful. Lock your door when you go to your room. Promise me you'll do that."

"I always do," she told him.

Tears stung her eyes again as the door closed behind him and she was left alone in the empty hall. She ran upstairs, eager for the warmth and light of her own room with danger locked out.

Beyond the threshold, the room was dark. The faint light from the hall penetrated for a little way and showed her the gray carpet and the shadowy outline of a chintz-covered chair, then merged into obscurity.

Her finger fumbled for the light switch and pressed it down. But no revealing radiance followed the click of the switch.

FUTURE PLANS for J.Q. CITIZEN
by U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

"The best way of saving for a working man is the Payroll Savings Plan for the purchase of U. S. Savings Bonds." That is the story from thousands of employed persons who are today helping their country and themselves as well. It is also the opinion of a couple in Niagara Falls who made a down payment on a new home with Savings Bonds. They are now putting 10 per cent of their pay into Savings Bonds so that they can buy a bakery. You too can build your own future by signing up for the Payroll Savings Plan where you work, or if self-employed, the Bond-A-Month Plan at your bank.

Prize Livestock

Livestock owners bringing their animals home after competition in state and county fairs are advised to keep them apart from home herds for 30 days—just in case they may have picked up a contagious disease that is slow in showing up. The American Veterinary Medical association says there is always a chance that show stock may be exposed to infection in transit or while on the fair grounds, yet it may take three weeks before signs of illness become apparent. In the meantime, quarantining them protects the home herd from exposure.

Mexican Indian Dance

Totonacs, an ancient Indian nation of Mexico, left important contributions of the quaint lore of that country before their high degree of civilization passed into oblivion. Their pyramids and temples have almost disappeared under the Mexican jungle, but their death-defying dance, the Palo Volador, still thrills writers and explorers who visit these modern heirs of a great civilzation.

Sewing Hint

Finish seams on material that ravels easily by turning the edges and machine stitching. This is a good idea for unlined jackets, also.

I'M THE ONE
WHO REALLY PAYS
THE BEER TAX.

"I see in the newspapers that the Federal and State excise tax on beer sold in Minnesota last year amounted to more than 17 million dollars. They say these taxes, plus all the others equal $10.60 per barrel or 50 per cent of the wholesale price of beer. This I am interested in, because beer is my beverage.

"Now, I hear there is a bill before the State Legislature that would increase the State Excise Tax on 3.2 beer from $1.10 a barrel to $3.30. This adds up to a 200 per cent increase.

"I don't mind paying my fair share of taxes, but when they increase the tax on 3.2 beer, they hit me where it hurts. As I said before, beer is my beverage; it's one of the little luxuries I enjoy.

"As I understand it, on a 15 cent bottle of beer I would be paying the equivalent of a 30% Sales Tax if this law went through. Of course, I'm not a lawyer, but it seems unfair to pass a law that singles out only one product—the common man's drink. If you ask me, this is class legislation.

"Every one knows the consumer pays the taxes—so as I started out to say, 'I'm the one who really pays the beer tax'."

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

I tried out the new Otter Tail line between Garrison and Max the other day and ran into Ralph Wait, foreman of the construction crew that built the line. "Reddy, my boy" said Ralph, "I want you to know that the people you serve are getting their electricity over the best transmission lines that can be constructed."

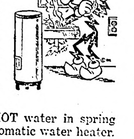
"Take this little 18-mile stretch you're travelin' right now," he continued. "Do you know how much material it took and what it cost?" I had to admit I didn't know. "Well," said Ralph, "it took 500 poles and 75 miles of wire. Altogether it cost $78,000 — which is $4,500 for every mile"

That figure sure set me back on my heels for a minute. Now I understand why there's more than a $40,000 investment behind every Otter Tail employee, and only about $6,000 per employee in other businesses. Making electricity is a very expensive business.

That reminds me of a story in the APPLETON (Minn.) PRESS about Alfred Darr. Alfred went to work wheeling coal for the Otter Tail Power Company in April 1926, three months after he came to this country from Germany. Today he's an operator at the Appleton plant. When you've got $40,000 invested in a man even before he's hired, you just naturally want to see him advance and "make good." And Alfred is just one of many who has "made good."

I'd like to give this month's neon-lighted orchid to my old friend, Walt Wenino, local superintendent at Fergus Falls, and his assistant, Cliff Haukebo. One afternoon this winter Walt and Cliff were on their way back to Fergus in their service truck, which is equipped with radio-telephone.

Near Wall Lake they saw a wrecked car in a ditch. They stopped and found the driver was badly injured. So Walt picked up his radio-telephone and placed a call direct to an ambulance service in Fergus. Ten minutes later the ambulance arrived and the injured man was on his way to a hospital.



Now, here's the "commercial" For HOT water in spring and summer, you'll need an electric automatic water heater. Lots of luxury — at little cost!

American Pearls

Pearls have so long been considered as Oriental jewels that it will surprise many to learn that specimens from the United States have been sent to Europe and even to the Orient. The famous "Queen Pearl", valued at $10,000, was found near Patterson, N. J. Pearls are found in mollusks in Maine, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and the Mississippi valley. Artificial pearls are made in France from guanin, a pearl essence obtained from the scales of large herring.

Holt Pioneer Called Home

The community was saddened on Wednesday to hear of the sudden passing of Mrs. Nettie Edwards, better known in Holt as Mrs. August Nass. She had been in failing health a few months but her death was unexpectedly sudden. Her death marks the passing of another grand old pioneer, who did so much to help build up this country. The fine children she leaves is evidence of her sterling character, which will live on in them.

Mrs. Nettie Edwards was born at Rice Lake, Wisconsin on August 18, 1881 and passed away at Northwestern Hospital in Thief River Falls on March 14, 1951, at the age of 69 years, 6 months and 27 days of age. Mrs. Edwards had been ill since Christmas.

She was baptised at Rice Lake and later moved to Battle Lake where she spent her childhood where she was confirmed. At the age of 16 years she came to Holt. She was united in marriage to Wilhelm Ness on June 25, 1898.

To this union 10 children were born. Mr. Ness died July 23, 1935. Later she moved to Roseau where she was united in marriage to James Edwards. Mr. Edwards passed away three years later. She lived in Roseau until March 1. 1951 wheu she came to stay with her sister, Mrs. T. B. Folden. She leaves to mourn six sons, John, Bertil and Harold of Holt, Edwin of Grand Forks, Reuben of Minneapolis, and Clarence of Portland, Oregon; four daughters, Sophie, Mrs. Victor Magnuson, Alice, Mrs. Julian Rodahl of Holt; Mabel, Mrs. Laonard Anderson of Sioux Falls S. D., and Dora, Mrs. Leo Anderson of Chicago, Ill. Also one brother, John Berg of Battle Lakeand one sister, Mrs. Folden, ann 15 grandchildren. Two sisters, three brothers and one grandchild preceeded her in death.

Fishing Rod 'Alarm'

"Alarm rods," fishing rods that ring a bell when the fish bite, have been patented by an Eastern inventor. Equipped with gaff-hooks on their tips to simplify landing of large fish, they have wood handles and metal shafts. The angler has no need to hold the rod after casting. When the fish strikes, a spring releases a liberal length of line for a sporting run.

Otter Tail Power Build Office

Construction of a new $37,000 office building and garage for Otter Tail Power Company's district headquarters at Hallock is scheduled to get under way in mid-April according to Mr. W. C. Naylor, Hallock district manager

The 40x80 foot, one story structure was designed by the company's civil engineer department. Of masonry construction with a brick front, it will house the company's Hallock district office and include a 6-car garage and warehouse space.

Much of the material has already been delivered at Hallock, and Mr. Naylor states that with good weather, the building should be ready for occupancy about the middle of July.

Orthopedic Clinic April 7

Any child who has or may be developing a crippling disability may come for examinatirn at the orthopedic clinic April 7 in Thief River Falls, according to Mrs. Ebba Sagmoen, who is serving as local chairman.

Mrs. Sagmoen advises parents who wish further information to call one of the public health nurses in this district or to write to the crippled children services Division of Social Welfare, 117 University Avenue, St. Paul 1, Minnesota.

"If you are bringing a child to the clinic for the first time, the nurses suggest getting a referral from your family doctor" Mrs. Sagmoen said.

The Thief River Falls clinic, which is set for 8 a. m. to 2 p. m April 7 in the High School, will will serve Pennington, Marshall, Red Lake and Kittson counties.

Beginning of Central Park

In 1840, acting on a suggestion by newspaper editor William Cullen Bryant, New York City bought the 840 acres comprising Central Park for $7,389,700. That area is now valued, on the basis of adjoining real estate, at $600,900 an acre, or more than $500,000,000. almost a 750 per cent increase. After the squatters, moonshiners and counterfeiters were run out of the area, 3,000 men worked almost 11 years to give the park its present topography.

Slim And His "Ali Species"

Slim Baker, who's always doing something crazy, had a lot of people smiling last week because his entry won a ribbon in the Women's Club Annual Pet Show.

Seems as though Slim saw a strange-colored alley cat with no tail over at Central City and brought it home. He washed, combed, and brushed it and put a collar on it with a card reading "Ali Species." Then he enters it in the show.

Hanged if the ladies didn't think it was some rare kind of cat and gave it a special award! When one of them asked Slim where she could get one like it, he said, "It's all yours, M'am—I can get an 'Alley Cat' anytime I want!"

From where I sit, some of us are pretty easily "taken in" just because someone else says it's so. Whether it's awarding prizes or passing judgment on a person's right to enjoy a temperate glass of beer—let's take a good look from stem to stern, and learn what it's all about before making up our minds.

Young and Healthy

The father was reading the school-report which had just been handed to him by his hopeful son. His brow was wrathful as he read: "English, poor; French, weak; mathematics, fair"; and he gave a glance of disgust at the quaking lad.

"Well, dad," said the son, "it is not as good as it might be, but have you seen that?" And he pointed to the next line, which read: "Health, excellent."

Eisenhower Says He Would Employ A-Bomb Under Certain Conditions

MAIN STREET FEATURE

DECISION— "To my mind the use of the atomic bomb would be on this basis.

"Does it advantage me, or does it not, when I get into a war? Now, if I felt that the material destruction that I was going to accomplish was not equal to the moral or great reaction otherwise to this act, then I would abstain.

"If I thought the net was on my side, I would use it instantly because I proceed from this basis: The United States is not going to declare war or conduct an aggressive campaign. It is merely going to defend itself, and if someone, in spite of its peaceful purpose, jumps on it, I believe in using what we have in defending ourselves."

With these words Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower told the world—friend and foe alike—just how far he would go to defend western Europe. It was the kind of clear-headed, logical reasoning that people in the home towns of the nation could understand. It reaffirmed their faith in the man chosen to fill the most important post in modern history.

It is this kind of reasoning and determination that the Communist nations of the world understand. And if the world understands this reasoning, it could mean another step toward the preservation of peace.

18-YEAR-OLDS— It would be difficult to say at this point who was more surprised by the 79 to 5 senate vote that passed the bill to draft 18-year-olds, opponents or supporters of the measure.

For weeks the debate had raged in the senate over lowering the draft age from the 19-year-old limit. And although the bill must go to the house for action, it appeared that much of the pressure against the administration's defense plans has been relieved. Most observers were inclined to believe the bill will eventually reach the President's desk.

Striving desperately to make peace between labor and the administration, Eric Johnston (center), economic stabilizer, met several times with union leaders in Washington. Shown with Johnston (left to right) are: Meany, AFL; Leighty, RLEZ; Hayes, IAM; Murphy, presidential council; and Goldberg, CIO.

The senate vote caused considerable speculation across the nation. In the first place, the man on main street wanted to know is it possible for five senators—the number who voted against the measure—to bombard the U. S. senate with so much propaganda that it completely ties up important legislation for weeks? Second, what happened to the other senators who had ranted and raged against drafting the 18-year-olds? And third, were the statements by opponents that the mothers of the nation flooded Washington with telegrams against the draft entirely true?

NO! NO! NO!— After a full week of conferences, watched enxiously by the "average man" who does not understand very clearly the niceties of diplomatic language and maneuvers, the foreign ministers' deputies of the United States, France, Britain and Russia, meeting in Paris, had nothing to report.

The only statements were "no, no" issued by Russia's Andrei Gromyko to every proposal put forth by the western powers.

Gromyko first gained the attention of the home-towners of the nation as the "no" man of the United Nations.

The main point of difference between the west and east remained the subject of rearming Germany.

KOREAN BATTLE—Slowly, methodically United States troops advanced in Korea, storming the hills, digging the Communists out of foxholes with bayonets, stopping and breaking a Red attack at other points, but always pushing toward the 38th parallel.

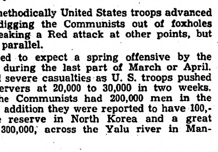
U. N. commanders continued to expect a spring offensive by the Reds, scheduled for some time during the last part of March or April. Meanwhile, the Chinese suffered severe casualties as U. S. troops pushed ahead, estimated by some observers at 20,000 to 30,000 in two weeks.

There were reports that the Communists had 200,000 men in the front lines below the parallel. In addition they were reported to have 100,000 more troops in immediate reserve in North Korea and a great reservoir, perhaps more than 300,000, across the Yalu river in Manchuria.

RUSSIAN ARMS— According to Russian reports the Supreme Soviet (Parliament) has adopted a 1951 budget of 451½ billion rubles, of which 96 billion would go for defense purposes.

Russia has placed a value on the ruble of four to the American dollar, but since there are so many imponderables involved, the rate does not reflect the true position of the ruble. If the rate is taken, it would indicate a total defense budget of $24 billion.

However, Soviet production, through use of forced labor and purchases from dominated countries at extremely favorable rates, is considerably cheaper than that of the United States.



The U. S. air force has ordered of Glenn L. Martin of Baltimore, Md., an undisclosed number of the British Canberra twin-jet bomber above. Britain gave the U. S. the plans for the plane as a part of the mutual aid pact between the two nations.

A NEW JOLT— The administration's price stabilization effort which has been called nearly everything, including "fraud", received another jolt, this time in the black and white of the wholesale price index.

The bureau of labor statistics' index hit an all time peak of 17 per cent above pre-Korean war prices and 20.2 per cent over a year ago. The bureau said all major commodities advanced except building materials.

The new figures wiped out any hope that the stabilization effort had finally started taking effect and a leveling-off was about to take place. The figures also brought renewed charges from labor that it would take a law "with teeth in it" to stop the inflation spiral.

Michael V. DiSalle, price director, told worried housewives in a television speech that it would be three more months before ceiling prices on food will be posted in stores. It couldn't be done sooner, he reported, because food prices vary by localities.

LAST HOPE— The supreme court refused by a vote of 6 to 0 to review the case of Alger Hiss, convicted of giving government secrets to a Russian spy ring before World War II. It was Hiss' last hope of escaping a five year prison sentence.

The Hiss trial made headlines in the nation's press for months. A guilty verdict and prison sentence was returned after a second trial.

The slender, brilliant attorney has stubbornly denied the charges of giving away governmental secrets.

COST OF LIBERTY

1,000,000th Man to Die for Country

The cost of liberty is high for this Republic.

As mothers and fathers throughout the nation ponder over the world's ills and worry about their sons in service, or soon to join the armed forces, somewhere in the mud and filth of Korea the 1,000,000th soldier to die for this nation may already be a casualty.

Adding in the Korea casualties, 995,100 men have died in defense of this Republic: This total, however, is not up to date since reporting of Korean casualties is two to four weeks behind. The latest Korean total stood at 52,448. Of these, 8,853 were dead of all causes and 9,899 missing. The remainder were wounded. This amounted to 300 weekly since the war started last June.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Popular Guy

"Inch for inch and pound for pound, the gamest fish that swims." That's the tribute paid many years ago to the black bass by Dr. Walter Henshall, a tribute famous in the lore of bass angling.

But it remained for James Heddon's Sons, Dowagiac, Mich., to come up with the most complete dossier ever assembled on his majesty, the largemouth black bass. The Heddon people declare:

An unpredicatable, but loveable scoundrel, the largemouth black bass is appropriately called the king of American game fish. Its many and mixed traits make it the most sought-after game fish in the world. Tossed together in its makeup are courage, stamina, viciousness, cunning, versatility, stubbornness, fight and—just pure cussedness.

At times it will turn from the most attractive artificial bait to gobble up a worm or minnow. Again, it will pass up the most luscious-looking gob of worms to smash viciously at the homeliest of plugs . . . Due to extensive transplanting, the largemouth is now found in nearly every state of the union, Canada and Mexico. Also it has been introduced successfully into France, Germany and South Africa . . . Look for the largemouth in fresh-water lakes, ponds, rivers, creeks and canals. Around lily pads, rushes, reeds, weeds, logs, sunken tree trunks, eroded pockets or deep holes . . . The world's record largemouth, caught on rod and reel, was taken by George W. Perry in Montgomery Lake, Georgie, on June 2, 1932. It weighed 22 pounds and four ounces. The average size, taking the country as a whole, would be from one to two pounds, but in the south the average is higher . . . No snooty aristocrat, the largemouth will please the live-bait angler by killing anything resembling worms, insects, frogs, crawfish, minnows, field mice, small birds, snakes and even young muskrats. On the prowl, the largemouth will smash with equal vigor at wet or dry flies, surface or underwater plugs, spoons, bucktails or spinner-and-fly combinations to the delight of the artificial bait man.

Lightest Spool

Of particular interest to the light-tackle devotee is the new, lightweight spool being featured in several of Bronson's 1951 line of lightweight reels. Claiming it to be the lightest spool on the market, the company points out that the new spool is machined all over, including the inside and is perfectly balanced. It weighs only 33/64 of an ounce, yet is rugged and durable. This spool is going into all the Coxe cross-bolt reels and is a feature of the model 30-C, shown here. This spool will give the caster unparalleled control of his lure, however light, and make for easier and far more enjoyable plug-casting.

Visual Checkup Need

According to a recent release by the Remington Arms company, accidents in the hunting field are not always caused by trigger-happy guys at the butt-ends of deadly weapons. The release cites the possibility that many hunting-field accidents may have been caused by color blindness.

For many years authorities on hunting have recommended that gunners who barge forth in the deep woods should wear some RED apparel, such as cap, coat or neckerchief. This practice undoubtedly has saved a number of lives.

The reason, according to Dr. Elmer M. Soles, director of the American Optometric association's department of public information, may be because of the physical defect of color blindness in so many persons.

"Contrary to general belief, a bright color is not the best safeguard against hunting accidents," says Dr. Soles, "because about 140,000 licensed hunters are color blind.

"To be sure you are seen by fellow hunters, wear a cap or jacket in a bold pattern of black and white. Some part of a hunter's costume should contrast with scenery."

Far Afield

The black duck, well-known eastern rival of the mallard in the favor of sportsmen of that area, is wandering far afield these days.

Several specimens, identified as black ducks, were shot on the west coast in Oregon and California during the season recently closed.

While it is not known if this is the first appearance of the species in the Pacific flyway, it is rare, and the hunters had some difficulty in establishing proper identification.

A single treatment of DDT to the soil around wooden structures gives complete protection against termite attack for at least five years, according to Michigan State college agricultural economists.

Eliminates Glare

To eliminate the glare from the late afternoon or early morning sun, affix paper or cardboard to the car window with cellophane tape. The car visors don't always hit the right spot.

Hen and Egg

About 22 per cent of a hen's body is protein and 14 per cent of an egg is protein, so the hen must have enough protein in her feed to keep her body weight up and enough more to produce eggs.

Cracked Car Windows

A cracked car window may be made useable until replaced by a new one if you run a strip of cellophane tape over break. This will prove effective against wind and rain.

Feather Pillows

If down or feather pillows aren't dirty but need freshening up, toss them into your automatic gas dryer, set at "Low," leave for 10 minutes and they'll turn out plump and sweet-smelling.

Shopping for Chicken

When buying a chicken, look for one which is plump in appearance, with well-fleshed breast and legs, smooth and soft legs and feet, and a flexible breast bone.

If more folks would remember the old saying, "Don't put off until tomorrow what you can do today," there's no telling how much better off they'd all be. And the worst thing about it all is that folks usually put off the most important things until a later date. For instance, there are a lot of folks who don't feel like they should who put off doing something about it.

Luther Harris

Luther Harris, 516 Chestnut St., Bowling Green, Kentucky, didn't feel good for a time, but he acted when he heard how HADACOL was helping people suffering from nervousness, aches and pains and run down condition caused by deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Iron and Niacin. Yes, Mr. Harris started taking HADACOL and now he says he feels good. Here is what he says:

"For quite some time I was nervous and run-down, and I suffered from aches and pains. I was weak, and I could hardly do a day's work. I started taking HADACOL and from my first bottle I felt better. Now I feel good, and I can do a good day's work. I am still taking HADACOL and I wouldn't do without it. I praise HADACOL very highly."

HADACOL Attacks Real Cause
Remember, HADACOL is not a quick-acting product that only attacks the symptoms of your ailments, but actually relieves the real cause of these disturbances when due to such deficiencies.

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 family economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied. Adv

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Stella Moore and Cleve Adams, while on a trip to town see Edward Thorndyke and a "blonde woman" pass in a car. Edward has hired Stella to pose as Dorinda LaCroix, who is dead, in order to help Dorinda's grandmother whom it was feared the shock might kill if she knew Dorinda were dead. But Grandmother Thorndyke penetrated Stella's masquerade and died of what was thought to be a heart attack. A salesman who recognized Stella on the street, Stella's friend, Anne Delahay, and Grandmother Thorndyke all have died under what might be regarded as suspicious circumstances. Stella thought she saw a flash of "yellow hair" at the clifftop when Anne was killed.

CHAPTER XV

Chaos swirled about her, something heavy crashed against her head. She was falling, falling downward in a bottomless pit until sight and feeling ceased.

Eons later, she climbed out of the pit again. Darkness gave way to a rainbow brilliance twisting itself into fantastic shapes which dissolved almost as soon as formed. She opened her eyes and looked up into Carol's anxious face.

She was in her own room, on her own bed. A wet towel lay on her forehead. Carol held a bottle of smelling salts close to her nose.

Morrow, the Lawyer, Suddenly Stricken

"I heard you fall—I still have the little room off Mrs. Thorndyke's, right next door. I heard a heavy thud in here. I decided I'd better investigate though I thought probably you'd knocked something over. I found the door open and you on the floor. For a minute I was afraid—" She stopped, her lips pressed together. "What happened?"

"You didn't see anyone?"

Carol looked surprised. "Why, no. Was someone in here? I thought you'd stumbled over the rug and hit your head against the bedpost. You were lying right under it."

"I didn't stumble. There was someone in the room. The light wouldn't go on and when I started back to the hall, I was struck on the head."

Carol's eyelids drooped, hiding the doubt in her eyes. "Of course if you say so. Dorinda," she soothed.

Lying there, unable to sleep, her eyes closed against the glow of the lamp, she made up her mind. "I won't go on like this," she promised herself. "It's too much. I've got to admit it—someone wants to get rid of me. That boulder that killed Anne. . . . But Randy, why would anyone take Randy?" She stretched out her hand as if she still might touch the rough coat of the small dog that had slept at the foot of the bed.

She had expected to make her announcement at breakfast, counting on the probability that Harriet and Lana would not be downstairs so early, but she had forgotten the lawyer who would be there. Lee Morrow was with Edward and Fay when she went downstairs. The three of them were just coming out of the living room when she reached the lower hall.

Edward shot a quick glance at her as she joined them. Something in her appearance seemed to puzzle him and he frowned briefly. But he only said smoothly, "I didn't expect you so early, my dear. It must have been quite late when you came in." One white hand pressed back his dark hair. "Dorinda, this is Mr. Morrow, my mother's attorney, of whom you have heard me speak. He arrived last night."

Breakfast ended at last. Morrow stood, his hand touching the back of his chair, his white-toothed smile upon each one in turn. "I think it advisable to attend to the business at hand as soon as we can," he declared. "If you yourselves and the servants can be in the living room, in say, fifteen minutes—" He raised his brows inquiringly at Fay who bent her head.

"Fay will attend to it," Edward said hurriedly. "In the meantime, Dorinda, I'd like a word with you. Will you come into my study?"

The girl assented quickly. It appeared Edward had sensed her desire to talk to him.

Morrow's voice claimed her attention again. "In fifteen minutes then." He looked down at his wrist watch, shook his head as if to see more clearly. His smile was gone now. His round face had lost its healthy color and become pinched and white.

Harriet appeared at the door of the breakfast room. She wore a frilled blouse and dark skirt. The crooked buttoning of her waist, the wisps of faded hair escaping its pins, showed in what haste she had dressed.

"I didn't mean to be late," she apologized. "I intended to breakfast with the rest of you, Lana will be down in a minute." She stared at Morrow. "Good Heavens, Mr. Morrow, are you sick?"

He did not answer her. In the bright light, Dorinda could see the thin film of sweat on his forehead. "I'll get my papers—" He stopped, bending over, his arms crossed and pressing against his stomach. "I'm afraid," he said faintly, "I'm going to be ill."

Dorinda looked at Fay uncertainly.

Edward sprang to Morrow's side and caught his arm to support the stricken man.

"Get Carol," he said to Dorinda, his face tense.

Dorinda Fears Attack May Mean More Danger

Carol took charge with characteristic efficiency. By the time they had led the lawyer to his bedroom, and Dr. Evans had arrived, the stricken man was resting more or less comfortably.

"Dr. Evans seemed to think I was a little precipitate in giving him an emetic without a doctor's say so, but any fool could see Morrow had eaten something which didn't set easily. However, he's sufficiently recovered now to make eyes at his nurse and enjoy having his hand held."

She made a little face. "At any rate, I'm removed from my status as house guest—if anyone can be considered a guest who has never been as much as invited to eat at the family table—and am, I hope, back on the payroll. Whether Mr. Thorndyke or Morrow will pay the bill, I don't know. Nor care, so long as I get the money."

Dorinda's returning smile was wan. "He frightened me," she admitted. "That sudden attack I thought perhaps—"

"You thought perhaps another accident had happened," Carol surmised shrewdly. "You didn't see a phantom hand dropping a deadly drug into his coffee cup, did you?" She went on without waiting for an answer. "No, my dear, nothing so dramatic as that. Little Morrow's trouble is just plain hoggishness, I'm afraid. Too much food, too much liquor—I wouldn't know. Maybe he's just working up to a good case of stomach ulcers."

When she went downstairs, Greer was just closing the front door. Through the lessening aperture she caught a glimpse of Edward at the wheel of his car just starting down the graveled driveway.

As she turned, she saw Lana at the foot of the staircase. She wore a sheer dress of misty gray under her silver fox jacket and a small black velvet hat shaped like a glorified jockey's cap pulled down over her smooth bright hair. A string of pearls encircled her round throat and she carried, her arm thrust through the straps, a big handbag of soft gray leather which seemed full to bursting, so full, in fact, that the clasp sprang open as Dorinda watched. Lana snapped it shut hastily with a quick glance at Dorinda.

"You look lovely, Lana," Dorinda told her in involuntary admiration.

"Thank you." Lana's tone was indifferent but there was a mounting excitement behind the baby blue of her eyes. "If the sheriff should show up, still wanting to know how I spent Tuesday afternoon, just tell him I'm — out. And that you don't know when I'll be back." She lifted one hand in a quick gesture of farewell and a few minutes later Dorinda heard the whir of her starting motor from the driveway.

Fay was at the window where she, too, had evidently watched Edward's departure, when Dorinda came into the living room. She turned her head and smiled, that brief smile peculiar to herself which possessed no warmth and left her eyes untouched.

Her hand made a swift movement in the direction Edward's car had gone. "Edward, as usual, running away from unpleasantness," she said dryly.

"I wanted to talk to him." Dorinda looked at Fay uncertainly. She didn't think she had the courage to tell Fay, without Edward's sustaining presence, of the decision she had made in the waking hours of the night before. But, unexpectedly, Fay helped her.

Fay in Agreement That Dorinda Should Leave

The older woman crossed the floor and came close to Dorinda. She looked intently into the girl's face.

"Tell me," she demanded abruptly, "do you ever think of simply clearing out of here without asking permission?"

Dorinda felt her face stiffen in astonishment. Had Fay, in some flash of clairvoyance, discovered what she had been planning?

"It's queer, your saying that. It's exactly what I would like to do. And the reason I wanted to see Uncle Edward. I've decided to tell Mr. Poole that I'm not what he thinks I am and see if he won't let me go away from here. But I thought it only fair to tell you and Uncle Edward what I intended to do before I went to the sheriff."

Fay nodded as if the words confirmed some secret thought of her own. "I guessed you had something of the kind in your mind. But listen to me. Perhaps I'm a traitor in saying this. But if I were you, I wouldn't tell Edward. He'll try to persuade you to keep quiet and stay here no matter what your reasons are for getting out. And I know, if you don't, how plausible he can be when he wants you to do things his way."

"Yes," thought Dorinda. "I do know."

"Then, too, I don't see any particular reason why you should tell the sheriff who you really are," Fay went on.

"And I think I can tell you how to work it." A quick puff of gray smoke obscured her face for a moment. "The inquest on Anne is set for tomorrow morning—Saturday. It was originally scheduled for last Wednesday but was adjourned, the sheriff hoping, I believe, to find some evidence that it was not a bona fide accident. As you know, he's done a lot of prowling around here with that bee in his bonnet. Naturally without success because I'm sure it was an accident just as it appeared to be.

"In any event, you'll have to attend the inquest. You can't get out of that. The coroner's jury will, I'm sure, bring a verdict of accidental death. And I don't see any reason why you can't go wherever you want to as soon as possible after that. I think they've given up trying to solve the mystery of Taylor's death. At least they know you had no connection with it.

"My plan is this. Pack a suitcase with the things you'll need in the next few days. The rest of your belongings can be forwarded to you. As soon as Edward is out of the way—and I can see to it that he is—I'll take you either to Trentville or Westport, which we find most convenient at the time for catching a train.

"You'll get back to Los Angeles with money enough for your immediate wants. The thousand dollars you'll find already deposited to your account in the bank where you once told me you had your savings. Anyway, you can write finis to your adventure. I fancy you're about ready to do that."

"Oh, I am," Dorinda declared fervently. "The only thing is—" She hesitated, ashamed of her fear. "I'll have to spend another night here."

"You'd have to do that in any event," Fay assured her impatiently. "Do you think the sheriff is going to let you walk out when you tell him you're not the real Dorinda?"

YUGOSLAVIA:

Kremlin Split Widens

Tito said "the Yugoslav government has broken diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of Albania on the grounds of persistent armed provocations on the Yugoslav-Albanian border . . . and the hostile policy carried out against Yugoslavia."

While the corn yield is below last year's 3,377,000,000 bushels, it is sharply above the government goal of 2,600,000,000 and a normal-sized crop of 2,900,000,000. Supplementing this year's crop is a record carry-over of about 860,000,000 bushels from last year's production, the department reported.

The grain sorghum crop, used for livestock feed, was boosted by good weather. Record crops of soybeans and sugar beets also were reported. Production gains were also reported for potatoes, dry beans, rice and tobacco.

There is no use holding a conference until Russia gives evidence that it sincerely wants agreement with the western powers, Bevin said. When that time comes the Big Four must take up "all the world's problems" instead of being limited to "one program drawn up by Russia."

The best way for Russia to get the western powers to agree to a conference is to fulfill the agreements made at previous conferences, Bevin added.

As yet the Soviet Union has made no concrete proposals to meet past commitments.

The Way it Happened . . .

IN MIAMI . . . A case of supposedly empty liqueur bottles, bought from a truckman by Charles Schwartz in connection with his hobby of making lamp bases from such things, turned out to be filled with a rare imported liqueur which gave the purchase a total value of $108.

IN DENVER . . . A man bought a "one-armed bandit" in a junk yard, intending to set it up in his recreation room as "atmosphere." Opening it out of curiosity, he found it still contained $73 in quarters.

Two champions praise New Dry Yeast

Mother and Daughter are Prize-Winning Cooks at Minnesota Fairs

Nine-year-old Marian and her Mother, Mrs. Myron W. Clark of Stewartville, Minn., look over a scrapbook full of ribbons. Mrs. Clark has won about 40 ribbons in the 3 years she has been entering the Minnesota State Fair . . . plus a Sweepstakes award in 1950.

Daughter Marian started her career as a champion cook in 1950 . . . with a second prize at the Olmstead County Fair. Both mother and daughter praise Fleischmann's New Improved Active Dry Yeast. "It's wonderful!" says Mrs. Clark. "Faster rising and easier to use!"

When you bake at home—use yeast—Fleischmann's New Improved Active Dry Yeast. It's the best ever . . . easier to use, faster dissolving. Buy a supply soon—serve delicious yeast-raised treats often!

Blame for Erosion Rests on Poor Soil Management Methods

THE blame for soil erosion usually rests on poor soil management rather than on washing of the land declared Dr. L. D. Baver, formerly with the Ohio State Agronomy Department.

"When we ask the question, 'How serious is soil erosion?' he said, "we probably have phrased the query wrongly. A better question would be is 'How serious is poor soil management?' "

Poor soil management, he said, effects more people than soil erosion. It affects people on level lands as well as rolling and hilly areas. Good soil management on the rolling lands includes more than erosion control.

"Good soil management," he said, "is closely allied to good farm management. You do not put grass on a hillside just to control erosion or make the countryside look green. Grass is planted there to make feed for a cow that will produce milk that will help rear a better boy or girl."

Poor Soil Management Causes Erosion Like This.

He pointed out that good soil management can restore exhausted land to profitable crop production. He cited tests at the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station at Wooster, where six inches of surface soil was removed from impoverished land. By good soil management, the subsoil's fertility level was brought above the average for Ohio. At Raleigh, N. C., where he formerly was dean of the agricultural college, land that could produce only 10 bushels of corn per acre was changed into pasture. The soil was limed and fertilized with phosphate and potash. Now the legume-grass pasture yields digestible nutrients equivalent to 92 bushels of corn per acre.

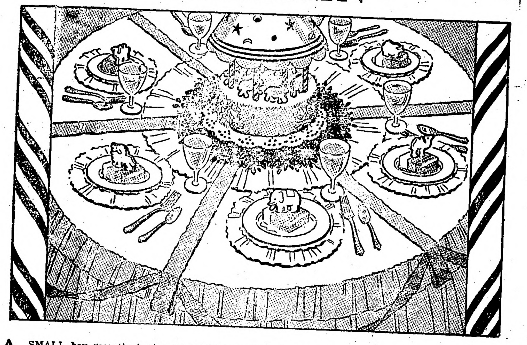
PARTY RECIPES FOR CHILDREN



A SMALL boy recently broke into print for a "bright saying" about his nursery school. The parents, it seems, although keenly interested in the curriculum of his new school, were never able to extract much news from Johnnie. However, one day near the close of the term, he volunteered some information.

"We have a surprise at school every single day," he confided, "and it's always crackers."

This reminds us that the first requisite in planning party foods for children is that they contain an element of surprise—something awfully good to eat, dressed up to look surprisingly pretty.

Ice Cream—Of Course

The second requisite, perhaps, is that the menu include ice cream or some sort of frozen fruit dessert. Ice cream and ices, incidentally, lend themselves very nicely to surprise appearances. For a patriotic party, for example, a scoop of vanilla ice cream can easily be converted into a tent, if a flag is stuck in the top, and a tiny toy soldier, for a favor, stands guard on the dish.

Brick ice cream can be converted into Circus Parade Ice Cream by serving on each slice some gaily iced animal-crackers on parade. For May parties, or other spring fetes, fruit sherbet becomes very festive and desirable if it is served in baskets hollowed out of delicious sponge cake.

Following are some recipes for party foods which children will find surprisingly good.

Circus Parade Ice Cream: Mix the contents of three cans of condensed milk with one and one-half cups of water and add one tablespoon of vanilla. Then add three cups of mashed banana pulp. Add three tablespoons of lemon juice and three cups of cream beaten. Freeze in refrigerator trays (or in the ice cream freezer). Serve with several iced animal crackers standing on top of each serving.

Molasses or Ginger Cookies: Boil one cup of molasses for a minute, add one cup of sugar, one cup of shortening, two teaspoons ginger and two teaspoons cinnamon. Then add two well-beaten eggs. Add four teaspoons soda mixed with one-fourth cup of vinegar. Add about five cups of flour (or sufficient to make a stiff dough). Roll thin. Cut as desired. Bake in a moderate oven —375 degrees—for about twelve minutes. Use also for making gingerbread men. You may sprinkle with sugar before baking if desired.

Cream Cheese and Fruit Sandwich: Slice bread thin, butter and spread with cream cheese. Cover with a layer of thinly-sliced ripe banana, then with a layer of well-drained pineapple. Top with another slice of bread, buttered and spread with cheese.

Red Cherry Turnovers: Drain the syrup from one No. 2 can of pitted red cherries into a sauce pan, add the cherries which have been cut into quarters, and add seven-eights cup of sugar. Boil gently until very thick, add a little grated orange peel, and cool. Roll pastry thin, cut in five-inch rounds and put a large spoonful of cherry mixture on half of each round. Moisten the edges with cold water, fold over and pinch the edges firmly together. Bake for twenty-five minutes in a hot oven. This makes eight turnovers.

Fruit Sherbet in Baskets: Boil one and two-thirds cups sugar and two-thirds cup water for three minutes, then cool. Add the contents of one No. 2 can of pineapple juice, one and one-half cups of orange juice and three tablespoons of fresh lime juice. Add the contents of one 1-pound can of evaporated milk and one-half cup of cream. Freeze. Make cup cakes of some plain cake recipe, or sponge cake, and hollow out the centers when cold. Ice the outsides with a thin coating of different colored icings—yellow, pale pink, green, etc. When ready to serve, put a ball of the fruit sherbet in each cake and make a handle over the top with a long piece of candied orange peel. Tie a bow of narrow baby ribbon on each handle. Serves eight persons.

the TAXPAYER and the WHALE

The whale, so the story goes, gave up Jonah. But the average taxpayer, swallowed in the craw of government ownership, never comes out of it.

Here's one reason. Since 1933 the federal government has taken over 150 electric companies -- and lost about 125 million dollars in taxes formerly collected from these companies.

This gigantic loss is made up from other taxes -- paid by you -- such as the October 1 raise in income taxes.

If you want to stop the tax drain on your pocketbook, take a firm stand against government in business -- both on the national level and on the local level.

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

DELINQUENT TAX LIST

A List of Real Property, For the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, on which taxes remained delinquent on the first Monday in January A. D. 1951.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, DISTRICT COURT
COUNTY OF MARSHALL—SS.
FOURTEENTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, to all persons, companies or corporations who have or claim any estate, right, title, or interest in, claim to, or lien upon, any of the several parcels of land described in the list hereto attached.

The list of taxes and penalties on real property for the County of Marshall remaining delinquent on the First Monday of January, 1951, has been filed in the office of the Clerk of District Court of said County, of which that hereto attached is a copy.

THEREFORE YOU, each of you, are hereby required to file in the office of said Clerk, on or before the twentieth day after the publication of this notice and list, your answer in writing, setting forth any objection or defense you may have to the taxes, or any part thereof, upon any parcel of land described in said list, in, to, or on which you may have or claim any estate, right, title, interest, claim or lien, and, in default thereof, judgment will be entered against such parcel of land for the taxes on said list appearing against it, and for all penalties, interest, and costs.

Dated this 3rd day of February, 1951.

EDWIN K. ROKKE,
Clerk of the District Court
Marshall County, Minnesota.

MR. D.A.'s CRIME CALENDAR

MARCH is the Month for . . .

RURAL CRIMES: Farm-bound (and often snow-bound) through the long winter months, rural dwellers now find themselves out-of-doors and rarin' to go. Pent-up emotions are suddenly loosed, old flames and animosities recalled. Result: violence, burglary, aggravated assault and purple crime keep country law enforcement officers hopping. You can name an upswing in rural infractions in almost every crime category. This is not merely the hazarding of a guess: crime reports covering farm areas jumped 7.4 per cent this time last year and are still on the rise. Homicide and auto thefts, oddly enough, drop noticeably in rural areas.

THE EQUINOX: Crimes are seasonal. Later this month, the sun's center crosses the equator and days and nights become of equal length. In many ways the seasonal change affects people strangely. In some respects the personality change takes a trend toward rash, ungovernable action — and lawbreaking. Persons never before involved in such matters are suddenly—but here predictably—mixed up in violent physical outbreaks influencing their entire lives.

ADULT DELINQUENCY: The kids are well into the year's first semester after an early revolt against the discipline of the classroom. Sporadic incidents of juvenile delinquency will continue to crop up but on the whole, with mid-term exams staring them in the face, the youngsters will not break out of their rebellious shell until summer vacations. But parental delinquents will be up and doing! The children being occupied removes that aspect of their own obligations—so the grown-ups step out, have a good time, become careless, and get into trouble!

'Planting Time' Will Promote Public Interest in Home Garden

An annual program to promote public interest in home gardening, to be known as "Planting Time", has been endorsed by the American horticulture council and is now seeking the cooperation of all American horticultural organizations in its observance.

The purpose is to enable horticultural organizations, garden clubs, garden writers, magazines, newspapers, seedmen, nurserymen, and all others interested in arousing public interest in home gardening, and instructing amateurs in this art, to act in unison and thus increase their effectiveness.

A MAIN STREET FEATURE

National Garden Week (April 16-22) was one of the first of the many "national weeks" now more or less publicized. Its observance, however, was handicapped by the fact that no single week can be selected which is timely for gardening activity through this great country. National Garden Week never obtained general acceptance and has now been almost forgotten.

The need for united action in focusing public interest in the home towns of the nation on gardening is generally felt, however, and the plan for "Planting Time" is proposed to fill this need while avoiding the difficulties which handicapped National Garden Week. "Planting Time" will not be limited to a week. The dates suggested are only the beginning of activity which will last all summer.

On the basis of U.S. department of agriculture records, the country is divided into five zones, in each of which the average date of the last killing frost in spring is approximately the same.

One month before this date is selected as the time for "Planting Time" in that zone. Seeds of hardy varieties may be sown; hardy plants may be transplanted; tender varieties may be started under protection, and merchants of garden goods should make these available to their customers.

Since it is impractical to say "Planting Time" starts in certain state or locality on a given date, only general regions can be outlined.

In the deep south, for instance, the home gardener should begin preparation for plants as early as January 1. From there the season advances until planting dates of the great midwest belt are moved up to February and March. In the northern states the dates advance from March into April. All depending, of course, on local conditions.

When spring begins, the urge to plant is universal. This urge "Planting Time" seeks to encourage so the home-towners of the nation can beautify their homes, improve the family health, reduce the cost of living, and strengthen the national defense.

* * *

April 15-21 is Noise Abatement Week, designed principally for better relations between neighbors in the home towns of the nation. Here are a number of questions that illustrate whether you are a "noise illiterate":

Is your apartment floor uncarpeted so that the tenant below can hear you walk about, drop your shoes, move furniture?

Do you play your radio louder than necessary—especially at night?

In conversation, do you raise your voice so those next door can hear you?

Are you a dishpan rattler?

Do you lean out of the window and scream at junior?

Do your noisy parties go on and on, long after the neighbors have gone to sleep?

Do you let the children race around your house screaming like demons?

Do you rattle and bang your garbage can?

Do you mow your lawn early in the morning before the neighbors are up?

Do you let your dog bark—especially at night or early in the morning?

Do you carry on loud conversations with your next door neighbor?

When you come home late at night, do you bang doors, carry on loud conversations, and generally annoy the neighborhood?

Do you play or sing so as to annoy your neighbor?

IMMIGRANT WORKERS

Displaced Persons Are Available For Work on Farms of the Nation

By JOHN W. GIBSON
Chairman,
Displaced Persons Commission

Tenants and workers for American farms are available among the displaced persons and expellees eligible for entry into the United States under the amended displaced persons act.

Displaced persons are people uprooted by war and aggression. They have no homes. They have little hope. Displaced persons are the concern of the United Nations, Expellees are people of German origin, called expellees because they were forced to flee from eastern European countries by the Communists.

To facilitate the recruitment of such farm labor the displaced persons commission on March 9 sent six American county agents and farm specialists to Germany to interview, select and certify farm families and have them available for immigration to the United States as soon as employment assurances have been received from sponsors.

This is part of a larger plan to recruit both skilled and farm labor from among these immigrants for America's defense effort. Previous to adoption of the new plan, it took six or seven months from initiation of a request from a sponsor until a displaced person or expellee was actually resettled in the United States. Under the new plan the processing time will be considerably shortened.

Under the act as amended in June, 1950, congress authorized the issuance of visas to 341,000 displaced persons by June 30, 1951, and for 54,744 expellees by June 30, 1952. By March 1, approximately 222,000 displaced persons and about 10,000 expellees had received visas.

Before an applicant is admitted into the United States he must go through the most rigid and exacting screening in our immigration history, no less than seven U.S. Government agencies checking and double-checking each applicant.

More information on this program may be obtained by writing to one of the 34 state displaced persons commissions or committees, to a voluntary religious or nationality agency, or to the Displaced Persons Commission, Washington, D.C.

Workers Must Undergo Strict Screening

Each immigrant farm worker undergoes strict screening before entering the United States. He must have a sponsor—a citizen of the U.S. The sponsor must (1) assure a job at prevailing wages in the community and without displacing another from employment; (2) assure adequate housing without displacing another; (3) assure that the displaced person or expellee and his family will not become public charges; and (4) provide transportation from the port of entry to the place of resettlement in the United States.

On his part, this displaced person or expellee must sign a good faith oath in which he agrees to abide by the employment offer. He is also given to understand that he will be deported for misrepresentation in any connection with this oath.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Duck Needs Home

The wood duck, most colorful of American waterfowl, is facing a housing shortage. This species prefers to nest in hollow trees, but in many locations is prevented from doing so because of a shortage of natural cavities in trees, or because those that do exist have already been taken by squirrels or 'coons. And, even if the wood duck gets there first, in many cases the nest is sooner or later discovered and broken up by squirrels or 'coons.

A highly satisfactory solution—both to the wood ducks and to people who like to have them around—is the man-made wood duck nest box.

Nest boxes should be made of rough, unplaned lumber about an inch in thickness. Galvanized nails should be used to resist rusting and should be driven into the boards at an angle to prevent warping. The covers should be tight to prevent rain seepage and fastened in such a way that the box can be easily opened for cleaning. The box should have no finish or creosote or stain, but should be allowed to weather. It will last 5 to 7 years. In the box, when finished, should be placed several inches of clean pine shavings for nesting material.

Cedar poles from four to six inches in diameter are preferable for mounting the box and should be driven firmly into the marsh bottom. This can be done very handily after ice forms by chopping a hole (see photo) and driving it from the ice. The poles should be located well out into the open water area so they will not be readily accessible to a raiding raccoon or cat.

The nest box should be placed on the pole five or six feet above the normal water level and secured with heavy spikes or wire so that it will not turn or sway in the wind. For the best results, the boxes should be erected well before the nesting season (April to July) and not disturbed during that season.

Cost Uncounted

In comparison with other items, the expense figures that get the least attention from the spender are those in connection with the sports of hunting and fishing.

"The outdoor sportsman may be fussy about his household budget, might meticulously turn off every unnecessary light blub or insist that the thermostat on his heater is set at the minimum," says Gail Evans, advertising and shooting promotion manager, Remington Arms Company, Inc., "but when somebody mentions the cost of hunting and fishing, he's generally looking out the window. There is, of course, a definite reason for this. To the hunter or angler, his sport is Big Medicine, to be taken in big or little sips and as often as possible. It is balm to the soul, nourishment to a tired body and sedative to jangled nerves.

Luxury? Don't be foolish! To hear the sing of a reel, to smell the smoke of gunpowder, to watch the dawning on an ice-fringed marsh or see the moon rise over a wooded lake . . . these are all events of much importance to the physical and mental well-being of the average sportsman and to count their costs in drab terms of dollars and cents is considered bordering on blasphemy. There are, however, always some sportsmen who do keep careful records of their expenditures. Hunting and fishing success is not usually determined by the amount of money a sportsman spends on any given trip, so maybe this record-keeping business is a mild form of sadism. It is not recommended for the guy with a one-way pocket."

Films Released

Two colorful films have been recently released by the U.S. fish and wildlife service.

They are "Conservation in Action," and "Hunting The Puma." Announcement of the films' release was made by Oscar L. Chapman, secretary of the interior.

"Conservation in Action" briefly tells the habitat needs of salmon, waterfowl, buffalo, mountain goats, moose and many other creatures, and depicts the activities of the fish and wildlife service in meeting these needs and managing the renewable resources in our waters and on our lands.

"Hunting The Puma" as the name indicates is an action-packed account of a mountain lion hunt.

Hand Lines

Hand line fishing still is more widespread than the average angler might expect. Many fishermen still use hand lines fishing from piers, bridges and breakwaters. Salt water hand lines usually are heavy, tarred lines capable of handling big fish which may be hooked. In hand line fishing, the angler should use more than one hook. The advantage in this is that with hooks spread at different levels, the angler can soon determine at what depth fish bite.

Don't Let Aches And Pains Make You Miserable
HADACOL Has Brought Relief to Thousands Who Were Suffering Deficiencies of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron.

Folks who suffer annoying aches and pains have quite a cross to bear because those pains can make them feel miserable. But now it is no longer necessary to let those aches and pains make your life miserable when they are due to a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron in your system. Thousands of folks have discovered that the great modern formula, HADACOL has relieved the real cause of their aches and pains, due to such deficiencies, and life seems wonderful once more.

Mrs. Pfeifer

Mrs. Lydia Pfeifer, who lives at 3115 Third Ave., Detroit 1, Mich., heard how many fine folks who were suffering such a deficiency found relief with HADACOL and she tried it. Mrs. Pfeifer says her aches and pains don't bother her any more and she just can't thank HADACOL enough.

Here is Mrs. Pfeifer's statement "Before taking HADACOL I had aches and pains, and could not sleep well at night. I have taken three small bottles, and one large bottle of HADACOL and feel so much better in all ways. I can never thank you enough. Now I can sleep and feel more like working. Again I thank you."

Give HADACOL a Chance to help you. If your system lacks these essential elements, you will be amazed at the wonderful results HADACOL can bring you, as it has to thousands of other fine folks who suffered a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron, which HADACOL contains. HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these precious Vitamins and Minerals to every organ and every part of your body.

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 family economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied. Adv.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Morrow, attorney for Mrs. Thorndyke, who has died, supposedly of a heart attack, after learning that the girl supposed to be her grandmother, Dorinda LaCroix, was an imposter, is mysteriously stricken in the Thorndyke home. Two others have died mysteriously since the masquerade began at the request of Mrs. Thorndyke's son, Edward, who told the imposter, Stella Moore, he was doing it for his mothers' good. Stella is attacked by a sense of foreboding and her own danger and Fay Thorndyke, Edward's cousin and fiancee, agrees that it may be better for her to give up the masquerade and leave the Thorndyke home rather than stay on at the risk of her life.

CHAPTER XVI

"I suppose your plan is best," she conceded unwillingly. "At that I don't imagine staying here another twenty-four hours will—" Will kill me, she had intended to finish the sentence. A tremor of fear stopped her. Her careless words approached the truth too closely.

A familiar voice raised in greeting came to her through the open window. Cleve's voice.

"I'll do as you say," she whispered quickly to Fay and ran from the room. Cleve had paused on the white portico to speak to Carol, who, hands clasped about her knees, sat in the sun on the top step. She looked up as Dorinda neared her.

"Little Morrow was in dreamland when I went back," she explained, "so I didn't linger. But I suppose I shouldn't stay away too long." She rose reluctantly, stretching.

"Keep her outside," she advised Cleve as she left them. He looked after her, admiration in his eyes.

"Darned pretty girl," he commented. He laughed as his gaze came back to Dorinda's face. "Only I happen to prefer blondes."

"There's something about a uniform—I mean a nurse's uniform," Dorinda said dreamily. But her gaiety sounded forced.

Cleve caught her hand, his hard brown fingers warm against hers. "By the way, you haven't reconsidered that suggestion I made last night?"

"Haven't given it a thought," she denied hastily.

Carol Tells Her Belief Something Very Wrong

Her words seemed to make no impression upon him. He looked down at her, half-smiling. "You're such a little nut," he said tenderly. "Listen, Dorinda, I've fixed up something for you. Since you scorn my proposition to make an honest woman of you, how about a visit to my house? Maybe when you see me on my own home grounds and come to know me better, you'll have a change of heart. I bear a message from my mother, asking you to spend a few days at the Adams domicile. How about it?"

"I'll have to ask—" she began.

"You'll have to ask Uncle Edward," he mocked. "I'll ask him myself. Your pretty nurse tells me he's not in so I'll telephone him later in the day. But get your grip packed for I'm taking you home with me after the inquest tomorrow."

After the inquest. After the inquest tomorrow she'd be on her way to Los Angeles. She couldn't tell Cleve that, though.

Edward did not come home until late in the afternoon. He ignored his previous request for a talk with her. But she didn't care, she had no desire to see him now.

She went to her room early that night. Carrie came in with her hot milk at nine o'clock. There was a bond between herself and the maid, Dorinda felt.

But tonight, to Dorinda's surprise, Carrie's eyes avoided hers. She fidgeted uneasily and seemed anxious to leave. But she stopped on her way out, her big hand grasping the door knob, and said strangely, "I try to do what I think's right, Miss. I hope you won't hold anything against me. All I want's for you to be safe."

She was gone before Dorinda could ask what she meant.

The black hands of the clock moved inexorably onward. At twelve she put down her book. Surely danger was safely locked out tonight. Perhaps she could sleep. But just as she untied the blue robe, a low tapping sounded at the door.

Dorinda stood motionless, cold with fright. "Who's there?" she faltered, and felt herself relax as Carol called softly, "Let me in. Quick, Dorinda. I've got to talk to you."

"Dorinda," she said, her tone low in spite of its harshness. "I was wrong. There is something queer going on in this house. You're getting out of here now, tonight. And I'm going with you!"

Dorinda backed away until the foot of the bed stopped her.

"No," she whispered thickly. "No." She put her hand against her throat, feeling fear an icy trickle along her spine.

"This may mean your life. You can't—just give up. You've got to get dressed and get away from this house." Carol's face, not more than a foot away, was set in stiff planes. Her black eyes were grim and narrow.

"But, Carol, why—who—?"

"There's no time to talk about it now. We've got to hurry, hurry." The nurse emphasized her words with another shake. "Come on, dear, dress. I'll help you."

The moonlight lay like silver frost across the grass, turning their immediate world into a black and white theatrical scene devoid of depth or color. Carol's face was a featureless silvery oval.

"The garage is so far from the house no one will hear us," she said. She breathed hard as she slid the wide door upward. "I've got the extra car keys. Your uncle keeps them in the drawer of the hall table."

She looked over her shoulder toward the house. Dorinda's eyes followed hers. When they had first come into the moonlight, Dorinda had looked up at the south wall of the house. It had been dark then, the windows blind, closed eyes. But now, on the second floor, an oblong of radiance broke the symmetry and stared down on them like a seeing golden orb which followed and noted every movement.

Carol's face, not more than a foot away, was set in stiff planes.

Carol saw the light, too. She raised her head uneasily. "Hurry, Dorinda," she said again. "We'll take the roadster."

They followed the curves of the driveway, they passed through the gates into the road. Carol turned the car to the left.

"Can you drive, Dorinda?" she asked abruptly.

"A little. I haven't driven for a long time though."

Tells of Her Hearing Strange 'Whisperings'

"Well, you're probably better at it than I am. I didn't want to ask you to get us started." Carol gave a short laugh that held no merriment. "But when you've calmed down a little—or maybe I mean waked up, you've seemed sort of paralyzed, you know—I'm going to ask you to take the wheel. I don't feel too confident about my own ability. Wait a while though, I seem to be getting along all right so far."

"Where are we going?"

"Los Angeles," Carol told her. "We ought to make it by three-thirty. That friend of mine—you remember the one I stayed with before—she'll take us in."

In spite of her admitted inexperience, Carol drove rapidly. They came to Trentville, rolled down the main street, where the little shops, closed and shuttered now, dreamed in the moonlight.

"Carol," she said softly. "Aren't you going to tell me?"

"Tell you what?" Carol leaned forward in her seat, looking intently at the road ahead.

"What you heard. How you knew—something was going to happen to me."

She felt the deep sigh that shook Carol's slight body. "It's hard for me to talk and drive at the same time. Or maybe it's that I hate to talk about it. It scares me."

Carol's voice was only a thread of sound, barely discernible above the hum of the motor. "I'd given Morrow his medicine," she began abruptly, "and tucked him up for the night. Then I went to my room and thought I'd read for a while. It was late before I knew it, half past eleven. I decided I'd take another look at Morrow before I turned in—he isn't sick enough to need much care but he's a fussy patient and the more attention he gets the better he likes it.

"Well, he was awake and declared he was hungry, so, when I couldn't talk him out of it, I said I'd go downstairs and get him a glass of milk. It was so quiet out in those half-lit halls—you know how you sort of tiptoe around so as not to break the stillness. Anyway, I didn't make a sound. I pushed open the rear door of the hall but it swung back shut—you know how it is. I didn't turn on the light—I know where the ice-box is and I got my milk and started back. It was just when I got back to the swinging door—I had my hand against it—that I heard what I heard."

Carol's arm was tense against Dorinda's. "Voices on the other side of the door. They were so close that if I'd pushed even an inch or two more I'd have struck them. Your name was what stopped me. I just waited there and listened.

"I couldn't hear much—they were whispering, you understand. Just your name and the words 'accident' and 'tonight.' It doesn't sound like much but it was terrible, Dorinda. Suddenly I knew you were right; that it hadn't really been an accident before. I just stood there and shook. It was a wonder I didn't drop the milk.

"I waited for a little after the whispering stopped and when I peeked out and saw the hall empty, I hurried upstairs as if Satan himself were after me."

She gave a forlorn little chuckle. "Morrow never did get his milk. I went to my room and walked around in circles trying to decide what to do.

Carol, Dorinda Flee During the Night

"At first I thought I'd call the sheriff. But I was liable to get bumped off myself while I was phoning and anyway, if he did come, what good would it do? Mr. Thorndyke would look at him in that 'my good man' sort of way he has and explain I'd had a nightmare and Mr. Poole would probably apologize and withdraw leaving whoever wanted to murder us to do it at leisure. Look how they've dropped that case of your friend. I tell you, in a small town like this, if you belong to one of the old families and have money you can get away with anything. You're sort of like royalty."

"I'm safe now," Dorinda told herself over and over. "I'm safe." Her lips were close pressed to control their trembling.

She made her voice steady. "Carol, it wasn't—it wasn't Edward out there, was it?"

Carol hesitated, half turning her head in the darkness to look at Dorinda. "Honestly, I don't know," she said slowly. "I don't think so. I didn't think so then. But people whispering—they all sound alike. You can't tell whether they're men or women. For some reason I thought they were women. But I could be wrong."

Dorinda's hand pressed the arm so close to her own. "I'm—I'm grateful, Carol."

"You needn't be. . . ."

She broke off sharply. The car swerved as the wheel jerked in her hands. "Dorinda, I've been watching the rear view mirror. There's been headlights from another car reflected almost all the way we've come. I thought we'd lost them a while back but now I see them again. Maybe it's a different car. It doesn't necessarily mean someone is trailing us. But there's so little traffic on this road—especially at night—"

"It's no use," Carol whispered, between set teeth. "I can't keep that up. I'll wreck us both. And anyway, I haven't gained anything. That car is just as close as before. Maybe it's not following us. I wish I knew."

Dorinda, watching over one shoulder, could see in the distance two yellow lights, like bright round eyes. But another car — it didn't prove someone was following them.

"They're after us or they're not." Carol had the manner of one who has made a decision. "We'll find out. Here's what we'll do, Dorinda. A few miles farther on there's an all-night hamburger stand. I'd planned on stopping for coffee in any event. I don't want to take any chance of either of us falling asleep at the wheel. The stand is a quarter mile from the main road and if the car behind us turns off there too, we can be pretty sure it's us they're following."

Five minutes later Carol gave an exclamation of relief. "Here's the road. Look, you can see the lights of the stand from here." And then, after a pause, "Did they make the turn, Dorinda?"

"They've made it," she asserted faintly. "Carol, they are following us. And the car's closer. A lot closer."

"Well, we've got this far anyway." Carol guided the roadster into the empty space in front of the small eating house and stopped the car with a jerk.

It was a little place, glass-fronted, with half a dozen stools, all vacant now, lined up in front of an oilcloth-covered counter. Behind the counter a glass pot of coffee simmered on an electric grill; a shimmer of heat rose from a black, greasy-looking metal sheet over a burning gas ring. The rattle of dishes came from the kitchen at the rear. There was at least an illusion of safety here.

Hand-Me-Downs

"Well, Bobby," said the minister to the small son of one of his deacons, "what is the news?"

"Popper's got a new set of false teeth."

"Indeed," said the minister restraining a desire to laugh, "and what will he do with the old set?"

"Oh, I suppose," replied Bobby, "they'll cut 'em down and make me wear 'em."

Story of Apple

Apples have entwined themselves through history, romance and science like the flourishing fruit they are. Who knows if Isaac Newton would have discovered the theory of gravity had it not been for the apple that gave him the idea. And American folklore would have been much the poorer without its delightful story of Johnny Appleseed.

PARK AVENUE
PEAS

Peas May Be Green, But —

PEAS may be green—in fact they should be, if they are fresh young things—but they have had sufficient social experience to appear at the most sophisticated parties and in the most sophisticated dishes.

If you are a modern hostess and believe in adding a few smart dishes to your culinary list, every month perhaps, so that your meals never get into a rut, you will want to keep plenty of canned peas on hand. Order them in the various sizes, both can sizes and pea sizes, so that they will be adapted to your various needs.

Party Peas

The following suggestion for a pea dish has been selected with an eye to both vogue and "good taste." It is yours for better parties.

Pea Puff with Pineapple: Drain the contents of one No. 2 can of peas, reserving the liquor, and press through a sieve. Make a thick white sauce of four tablespoons butter, four tablespoons flour, one cup of milk and then add the pea pulp. Season to taste with salt and pepper, add three well-beaten egg yolks and fold in the three stiffly-beaten egg whites. Pour into a buttered baking dish and set in a pan of hot water. Bake in a moderate oven—350 to 375 degrees—until set and a delicate brown. It will take about twenty-five to thirty minutes. While baking, cook two tablespoons butter and one cup of crushed canned pineapple together until thick and rich. Spread this over the baked puff and serve at once. This serves eight persons.

In Darkest Africa

Forests in some parts of Africa are so thick that most animals cannot live in them. They are inhabited by reptiles, monkeys, and birds. Curiously enough, while the birds of Africa are among the world's most beautiful, few of them sing, according to the World Book encyclopedia.

White Ash and Rattlers

Is it true that rattlesnakes do not live where white ash trees grow? There is some justification for this idea. White ash grows generally on a rich, moist soil in thick woods and near water, while rattlesnakes prefer as a rule open, dry, stony, sunny places. Thus, they are not likely to be together.

Lime Plus Balanced Plant Food Diet Needed To Fit Acid Soils For Good Legume Growth

Fertilizing is a "must" for legumes and pasture renovation.

CHICAGO—Getting legumes to grow is as much a problem of providing a balanced supply of plant food as it is of ridding the soil of acidity, according to Dr. William A. Albrecht, head of the Soils Department of the University of Missouri.

Liming alone will not cure the ailments of an acid soil, Dr. Albrecht declared. Overliming may do more harm than good. What the soil needs is plenty of other fertilizer elements needed to grow crops.

"Legume crops fail, not because a soil is acid, but because its fertility is leached away," he said.

"Acidity is a natural soil condition in many parts of the temperate zone. It occurs where rainfall is high and where virgin forests once covered the land. Water has washed down through the soil and leached out much of its fertility. Applications of limestone and other compounds carrying calcium to acid soils are widely known as beneficial soil treatments.

"But acid soils may need more than lime. Calcium has been a good fertilizer for legumes on acid soils. It has been serving directly as a nutrient for the plants. But it has also served indirectly by helping other nutrients get into the plant roots more abundantly. It helps the nitrogen of acid soils, the phosphorus and potash and other elements to be taken more readily by the crop.

"We can grow legumes on acid soils if we will give them calcium and all the other fertilizers needed by the soil. Legumes which are an indispensable forage for dairy and beef cattle, must have fertile but acid soils to make the amino acids from which the cattle produce proteins. Lime is one of the foremost fertilizers in making soils capable of supporting the protein producing crops. But phosphorus, also, is needed for this service. A plant needs potash, too, to make the carbohydrates from which the proteins can be constructed."

Bowling Once Church Rite

The sport of bowling originated as a religious ceremony in cathedral cloisters where, if a parishioner bowled over his pin, he was considered to be leading a clean life.

Preventing Wall Marks

To keep pictures and mirrors from making a mark on the wall, put a thumb tack at the back of both bottom corners. The tacks keep the frame from touching the wallpaper.

The Press of the State is the sounding board for public opinion. It is therefore enlightening to consider the following editorial excerpts from the Minnesota Press, commenting on the Governor's proposal to increase the beer tax:

New Prague Times January 25, 1951
"THE POWER TO TAX IS THE POWER TO DESTROY"
"The power to tax is the power to destroy" is an ancient maxim that holds just as true today as it did a couple of centuries and more ago. "Proposal to the state legislature that the state tax on beer be tripled brings to mind the old maxim . . ."

The Minneapolis Star January 24, 1951
"WHY BOOST STATE TAXES WITH SURPLUS ON HAND"
". . . It doesn't make for economy in Government to raise taxes while surpluses exist. There is too much temptation to spend more than is necessary . . ."

Appleton Press March 2, 1951
"TAXING BEER AGAIN"
". . . Heaping taxes on beer to the point where it will not sell is hardly calculated to bring in more revenue. The breaking point may be reached where excessive taxation will actually reduce income from taxation . . ."

St. Paul Pioneer Press January 23, 1951
"OVERTAXING THE PUBLIC"
". . . While there is a 50-million-dollar surplus idle in the income tax fund, the lawmakers are asked to impose new taxes amounting to 7 millions a year on two selected products, iron ore and beer . . ."

LeCenter Leader March 1, 1951
"TAX INCONSISTENCY"
". . . Gov. Youngdahl is against a sales tax. Yet the Governor's tax philosophy is hypocritical. The cigarette tax, which he sired, is strictly a sales levy, paid by the consumer. Now a proposed increase in beer taxes which the chief executive wants imposed, is another exception to his 'no sales tax' stand . . ."

Duluth News Tribune January 12, 1951
". . . The Governor's proposal for the breweries is really a selective sales tax because the taxes will largely be passed on to the consumers of beer . . ."

Slayton Herald January 18, 1951
"TAX STRUCTURE OVER-HAUL DUE"
". . . The proposed increase in tax on beer is another story again. That money will come from the pockets of those who consume the vast majority of beer sold in this State—the farmer, the skilled and unskilled laborers, the small businessmen . . ."

Coleraine Iron News March 8, 1951
". . . If beer is a marketable product, and legally it is, there is no justice in singling it out for super taxation . . ."

Willmar Journal March 1, 1951
". . . If brewing is a legitimate industry in this State, it should be left to operate as such. If the intention is to drive the industry out of business, direct action should be taken instead of the indirect method of burdensome taxes . . ."

"LAND O' LAKES gives us help when we need it!"

says MARVIN BAKALYAR, operator, Minneota, (Minn.) Cooperative Creamery Company

"If we run into problems at the creamery, LAND O'LAKES fieldmen are always ready to help us solve them," says Mr. Bakalyar. "And they do the same for our owner-patrons by helping them boost the quality of their milk . . . and that means better prices all around.

"And another thing. In dealing with LAND O'LAKES, we know we're getting good, honest grades on our butter. So I'd say LAND O'LAKES offers farmers and creameries a fair and square deal. And no wonder . . . the farmers own it."

The Typha Plant here has stepped up production by operating an extra shift or 16 hours a day. Having shipped out one carload of Typha, they have an order for one more, besides several smaller orders to various firms.

Mrs. Duane Larson of TRF was given a pink and blue shower at the Tony Peterson home Sunday. She received many lovely gifts.

Lightning As a Fetiche

Fabulous tales about lightning still circulate throughout the world. In Europe, thousands of objects popularly identified as thunderbolts or thunderstorms are preserved in the homes of country folk, who regard them as charms against a number of harmful agencies.

Mrs. I. Engebsetson Died

The Holt community was saddened to hear of the sudden death of Mrs. Iver Engebretson pioneer of this community who passed away suddenly at Thief River Falls on April 5th. Funeral services were conducted at the Nazareth Lutheran church on Wednesday with Rev. G. S. Thompson of Thief River Falls officiating.

Mrs. Ingeborg Engebretson was born in Norway of parents Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Sagstuen, on Dec. 24, 1883. At the age of two she came to America with her parents and lived at Benson, Minn. until 1901 at which time her parents homesteaded in Marshall County. She was united in marriage at Holt to Iver Engebretson and to this union eight children were born.

She has made her home in Thief River Falls the past 12 years.

Surviving are six children, Emma. Mrs. D. R. McTavish; Anna, Mrs. Clarence Peterson, both of Duluth. Clara, Mrs. A. V. Sundfor, and Lorraine both Chicago. Earl of Donald, Wisc. and Orris of Los Angeles, Calif. Also 12 grandchildren and four brothers, Lars Anderson of Rhinelander, Wisc. Ludvig, Anton, Carsten of Holt. Her husband, two infant children and her parents preceeded her in death.

Interment was made in the Holt cemetery.

Card of Thanks

Our heartfelt thanks to all our friends and relatives for their kind assistance and sympathy shown during our recent bereavement. We especially thank Rev. Thompson for his kind message, the singer, the organist, the pall bearers and for the floral offerings gifts and memoriams. Also to those who served the fine lunch. May God Bless you all.

Brandt Explains Rising Costs

Farmers today face a situation of greatest demand for food production while costs for their 1951 crops are highest and prospects for a net return on their hourly efforts are lower than in past years, John Brandt, president of Land O'Lakes Creameries, said.

In discussing this problem, Brandt cited latest available figures which showed the average price of agricultural products about 8% below the average peak price for there products during the years 1944 to 1949 inclusive At the same time, wages for this period have increased 23.4% and industrial earnings have gone up 31%.

Brandt went on record as contradicting the general impression held by the public that prices for agricultural products had caused skyrocketing of living costs.

In making this statement, he cited several examples of farm commodities that have dropped in price, such as:

	Highest price post war period	Price Jan. 1 1951
Wheat	$2.92	$2.15
Corn	2.46	1.43
Oats	1.24	.83
Butterfat	.99	.75
Cheese	.4315	.405
Turkeys	.56	.36
Eggs	.50	.317
Chickens	.306	.179

As a practical solution to the problem of rising costs Brandt said that "if everyone who is employed in any phase of the business life of America would put in the same long hours that farmers will put in in 1951 at the decreased rate of hourly income the farmer will receive, the inflationary trend would take an opposite turn. The way to meet inflation is through greater production to meet the increasing demand and to produce more for the wages we are paid so we can buy more with the money we receive for onr efforts.

Drivers in Crash Unlicensed

No one not even among the youthful victims, could think of any excuse for that traffic collision the other day.

It was a typical, quiet and uncrowded Minn. country road. One girl was killed. Another, and the two drivers, were hauled away from the scene seriously injured

It was still daylight, somewhat foggy but vision not otherwise obstructed, the road was not icy, no pre-collision defect was evident in either car. Yet the two cars hit head on. Why?

Then, the credentials of the two injured drivers provided the answer! Neither one even had a license to drive a car.

One, a teen ager, had never had a driver's license. The other had lost his license in 1950 by revocation for dividg while intoxicated, had been picked up within the past month for driving while under revocation, and and at the time of the fatal collision was again driving in violation of the law even while his second conviction was under stay of sentense by the local court.

Drivers licenses authorities put it this way: "One driver had never shown his ability to drive. The other by his own conduct had proved himself an unsafe driver. But both were driving. They met"!

One hundred per cent local enforcement of drivers license laws is seldom attainable, safety leaders admit But in this case, they pointed out, just 50 per cent enforcement would have averted the tragedy - "1 killed, 3 hurt".

Ladies Aid Bake Sale

Circle 5 of the Nazareth Ladies Aid will sponsor a Bake Sale Friday April 27 which will be held at Gunheim's Store. Many delicacies of home baked goodies will be sold. Lunch will be served all day.

New Dust Mop

A new aid to the housewife is a cotton cover using a mop fringe for its bottom. The cover fits over the bottom of a broom to form a dusting mop for walls and ceilings. The bag-like cover can be snapped into place very easily, or removed for washing.

Farm Sale of Seeds

Seed of farm grain legumes, grasses and other agricultural seed sold by farmers to other farmers is required to be cleaned tested and labeled. Farmers should not buy unlabeled seed from their neighbors. Besides being illegal this practice often results in serious spread of very harmful weeds and infestations of many clean farms. Leafy spurge, field bindweed, thistles, dodder, catch fly, Frenchweed and all other weeds are spread this way. Few farmers know what weeds are on their neighbors farm and most farmers do not even know what they have themselves. Do not buy unlabeled seed from farmers or from dealers.

The whole 1951 crop is not worth a human life or a maimed body, points out Glenn Pickett, extension farm safety specialist. He urges you to slow down enough to work safely this spring. Be especially careful in operating the tractor.

Attention Farmers

Due to blocked roads in the southern part of the state, the State Committee extended the deadline for signing up the 1951 farm plan until April 30, 1951, stated A. E. Strandquist Chairman of the Marshall County Production Marketing Administration. He also stated that the PMA Office will be open on Saturday from 8 to 12 noon in the future.

Boy Scout News

The regular meeting of the Thief River Falls District of the Boy Scouts will be held at the Middle River School on Wednesday, April 18th at 8:00 P. M. The film "Exploring Grows in the Troop" will be shown.

Tight Rope
By Allison L. Burks

Nurse Carol tells Stella Moore, masquerading as Dorinda LaCroix in the Thorndyke home at the request of Edward Thorndyke, of her belief that danger and death hang over the house. Already Grandmother Thorndyke, who was the object of Stella's deception, a salesman who had penetrated Stella's masquerade, and Anne Delahay, Stella's friend, have lost their lives under suspicious conditions. Carol relates how she has heard strange "whisperings" outside Stella's door, and prevails upon the latter to flee the Thorndyke house with her. The two women note that a car is keeping behind them and determine to find out if they are being pursued, and by whom.

CHAPTER XVII

She took the stool farthest from the entrance and closest to the kitchen. But she could not force her eyes away from the door. Soon it would open, it must open. But she could not picture nor even surmise who it was that would appear in the opening.

Minutes passed. The door did not open. Perhaps, Dorinda reflected, her pulse quickening, whoever was outside intended to wait until they came back to their car.

As if invoked by her unvoiced demand, she heard the click of the latch. The door swung open and a black-coated figure stood framed there, dark hat pulled down over his white face.

"Uncle Edward!" Dorinda gasped and, without reason, felt her tension slacken. She did not know who it was she had expected. But at least it had not been Edward.

He did not look at Carol but came straight toward Dorinda.

"My poor child!" he said. His voice was raw and strained, its unctuous quality gone, banished by some impelling emotion she could not name.

He put one soft white hand under her chin, tilting her face up toward his so that she looked into his eyes. "Dorinda, thank heaven I've found you. I never thought you'd run away from me, my dear. You don't know what you're doing."

"I had to go," she told him quickly, the words tangled on her lips. "Someone there—back in that house—wants to kill me. Someone tried last night—"

"Last night." His eyes narrowed. "You didn't tell me that."

"I didn't have a chance. Someone was waiting in my room when I got home. Whoever it was struck me. Carol found me. She thought I'd fallen and hit my head. But I know that isn't true. And tonight—"

Dorinda Feels Almost Ready to Trust Edward

"You should have come to me," Edward interrupted sternly. "Surely you know I wouldn't have you hurt. I never meant any harm to you, Dorinda. You must believe that."

"But I won't go back," she protested like a terrified child. "I'll never go back to that house. You can't make me."

"I won't ask you to go back there," he conceded patiently. "I don't want you to go back. But I can't have you running away. Listen, Dorinda. Today young Cleve Adams telephoned me and asked that I permit you to visit him and his mother. How would you like me to take you there tonight instead of tomorrow." He glanced down at his watch. "It's really tomorrow now. And in the morning I'll see you and we'll have that talk we've been anticipating for so long. I can't say the things to you I had intended—it's too late for that, I'm afraid. What happened tonight—and last night—has changed my plans." He sighed heavily.

"Well," Dorinda consented. She couldn't feel any fear of Edward. Almost against her will she believed him when he assured her he would not let her come to harm.

The cook, who had retired to the kitchen, came back as she slid off her stool. Edward threw a dollar bill on the counter.

"No change," he said curtly.

As the man stretched out bony, nicotine-stained fingers to pick up the money, Dorinda, in a flash of recollection, remembered where she had seen him. He was the man who had passed her in McGregor's store that day three weeks ago, whose pale eyes had stared at her curiously from his thin face with its twisted look that in some way suggested deformity.

Her eyes sought Carol. "Do you think it is all right for us to go with Uncle Edward?" she asked diffidently.

The nurse shrugged. "Oh, yes, I should think so," she said tonelessly. "Go ahead, Dorinda. I'll have to take the roadster back."

"But Carol—" Dorinda began to protest. Though she was not afraid of Edward, it had been no part of her plan to go back alone with him.

But the other girl pushed past her without heeding her protest and went out alone into the night.

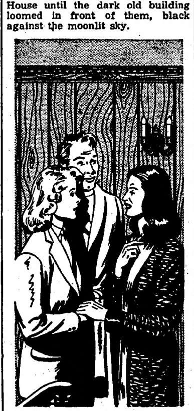
She hesitated, standing there beside the stool she had just vacated in the narrow restaurant. She was a fool, common sense told her, to trust Edward. She didn't trust him. But she didn't believe he would harm her. He liked her. She knew that. Perhaps his feeling for her was a little stronger than liking. She hadn't lived in the same house with him for over five months without discovering his susceptibility where a pretty girl was concerned.

Edward hardly spoke during the hour they were together. Once, when they had turned from the side road into the boulevard again, he said, "You should have come to me, Dorinda, instead of running away. I would have protected you from whatever it was you feared. If you'd gone—well, there would be repercussions. Poole might even have issued a warrant for your arrest.

"Mr. Poole hasn't been to the house for a couple of days," she said in a small voice. "I thought—Carol thought, too—they'd dropped the case."

She saw Edward shake his head without speaking.

Once her breath caught in her throat. She had not realized how close they were to Thorndyke House until the dark old building loomed in front of them, black against the moonlit sky.



Mrs. Adams met them at the head of the staircase.

"You promised—" she began, her voice shrill with alarm, then stopped as the car glided swiftly past the iron gates without even a pause. She had forgotten that in order to reach their destination they must pass the house she had, a few hours ago, hoped never to see again.

Edward Takes Dorinda To Cleve's Residence

They were past the house. She turned her head and watched, as she would have watched a dangerous beast, and drew a long sigh of relief when the winding road removed the place from her vision.

Above the soft purr of the motor, she could hear the steady booming of the surf. Along this section of the road, the coast line curved in uneven scallops, so that sometimes their black car was almost on the edge of the bluff, so close the twisted black cypress rooted precariously in the sandy soil almost brushed against them. A quarter of a mile farther on, the sea might be hundreds of feet away.

On one of the widest of the scallops, an elaborate structure fashioned along the lines of a Spanish ranch house stood some distance back from the road. This must be what Cleve had once described as the "simple beach cottage of the Van Sillars, a toy of some twenty rooms more or less." The only house between his own home and that of the Thorndykes.

Less than five minutes later the car turned in through a white picket fence to another graveled driveway. This was a house, too, she had never seen before. But it did not seem unfamiliar. How many times had Cleve told her of the low building with its wide porches sprawled under the big sycamores. It looked exactly as she had pictured it, silvery white in the moonlight, its low-pitched roof and open shutters black now; though morning would reveal them as a soft green.

The car came to a stop, but as she would have slid from her seat, Edward delayed her, his hand on her arm.

"I'll be over as soon as I can get away tomorrow," he told her. "We'll talk things over. Perhaps we'll find it necessary to tell Poole who you really are. I doubt if he's accepted that accident theory yet. But if the truth must come out, I want to tell him myself. It will look better—for me, at least. You'll let me do this, my dear? You won't say anything until you've seen me again?"

"No." Dorinda felt she could safely promise this. "I'm willing to let you explain. But it must be soon. I'll feel—safer."

"Safer!" he echoed. She could sense that he was trying to study her face through the darkness. "Surely you don't think this—this impersonation has anything to do with your safety?"

"No one tried to kill me when I was Stella Moore," she said frankly. "Someone wants Dorinda LaCroix out of the way—I don't know why. I think now that what happened to Anne was meant to happen to me."

"But that was an accident," he protested. "Believe me, Dorinda, it couldn't have been anything else." He sat motionless beside her for so long that she stirred impatiently. "It must have been an accident. I can't see how it could have been—intended." But his voice had changed with the added words and become oddly uncertain.

"It's very late." He sounded tired. "We won't talk of what has happened any more tonight. Tomorrow—"

He stepped down from the driver's seat and came around to assist Dorinda. But the girl was already out of the car, moving swiftly ahead of him toward the darkened house. She crossed the porch and pressed one finger against the electric button beside the entrance as he came and stood beside her.

It was a long time before her ring was answered. She could picture them inside, awakened by the shrill summons echoing through the silent rooms. There would be a wait. Had the bell really rung or had it been only one of the sounds heard in dreams? She pressed the button again. Light outlined the two narrow glass panels beside the entrance. The door swung open. Cleve, dressing gown tied about him, dark hair tousled, stared at them unbelievingly.

"Dorinda! Mr. Thorndyke!" The drowsiness fled from his blue eyes. "What has happened? What's wrong?"

Cleve Assures Dorinda She's Free of Danger

"Nothing is wrong," Edward's tired voice said. "Dorinda's had a fright. Nothing to worry about but you can imagine the effect on her added to the trying events of the last week. So I've anticipated your invitation and brought her here. I must apologize for disturbing you but, frankly, I didn't know what else to do. There is the village hotel, but you can imagine the gossip if she arrived there at this hour, or any other hour for that matter. It seemed—impossible."

"Of course. You were right to bring her here. What's the loss of a little sleep between friends?" Cleve caught Dorinda's hand and drew her inside. "You look like a ghost, Rinda. And your hands are like ice. I'll wake Mother and we'll fix this girl up, Mr. Thorndyke. Won't you come in?"

Edward shook his head. "I've caused enough bother for one night. I must get home. I'll be over in the morning with whatever clothes my niece needs. Fay will attend to that."

"There's a suitcase already packed in my room," Dorinda interposed.

He looked at her sharply. "You'd anticipated then—Oh, well; that's another angle for tomorrow's discussion. Good night, Dorinda. Good night, Cleve."

They heard his quick steps as he crossed the porch and a moment later the slam of the car door.

"My poor little love." Cleve put his arm about her. "What have they been doing to you?"

She burrowed her head against his breast. "Cleve, someone wants me out of the way. Tonight Carol heard them talking. We ran away in the car but Uncle Edward followed and stopped us. But I wouldn't go back to that house. I'll never go back."

"Good God, Dorinda! I never dreamed — Poole thought you'd be safe until after the inquest. If I'd had an idea—"

She leaned back in his arms and looked up at him. "Do you know what this is all about? You sound as if you did."

"Not exactly, honey. But I think Poole has a theory. He left night before last for Los Angeles. He'll be back in the morning. He had a hunch and he's tracking it down. Now, what about overhearing threats against you? Tell me exactly what happened."

He listened intently as she went over the events of the night. When she finished, he made no comment on what she had told him. But his lips had thinned and she could see the twin sparks which burned in his eyes.

"You needn't feel afraid any longer, Dorinda. That's over. And now we've got to get you settled. Good Lord, child, it's nearly three o'clock."

His arm still about her, they went up the stairs together. Mrs. Adams met them at the head of the staircase. She looked like a girl with her black hair hanging about her shoulders, a rose-colored negligee outlining her slim figure. But her blue eyes were perturbed.

"What on earth has happened?" she asked even as her hands went out to Dorinda in quick welcome.

Child's World Is Wonderful

Carmelita Plonka

The world that children live in is mighty wonderful . . . filled with little daydreams and hopes and joys that make the older folks sometimes wish they were school-age again But boys and girls have their ups and downs, too, particularly when they are not feeling well. Ten-year-old Carmelita Plonka, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Plonka of 3202 S. Aberdeen, Chicago, Ill., was not feeling good recently and was just too listless to get the most out of her school days. Fortunately for Carmelita, though, her grandmother suggested that her mother give her HADACOL, because she had heard how much it was helping children deficient in Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin. Now Carmelita feels fine and her mother says she has a big appetite.

Here is Mrs. Plonka's statement: "My daughter Carmelita, who is 10 years old and in the fifth grade, had always been underweight and I had to positively force her to eat. She had no interest in food whatsoever, but I knew that she had to eat. When we were visiting my mother in Missouri over the Christmas holidays she suggested I give Carmelita HADACOL. I bought a large bottle of it that same day and was amazed at the change in Carmelita. Her appetite picked right up and she now eats three hearty meals a day plus in-between snacks. I have really praised HADACOL, and highly recommend it for everyone."

HADACOL can help you, if you suffer such deficiencies. Ask your druggist for HADACOL today.

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 family economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Walnuts make many dishes festive; try adding them to a salad of chicken or tuna fish, to boiled rice to be served with curry, or to a sandwich of soft yellow cheese and pimiento.

Glaze your carrots with sliced oranges, brown sugar and meat drippings. They'll have a spicy, interesting flavor.

Squash takes to orange juice as a seasoning. You can mash the pulp, season with the juice and return it to the shells.

Cabbage, cut fine, and cooked with sour apples and caraway seed makes a good vegetable dish served with spareribs or pork roast.

Don't throw away the water in which you cook vegetables because it contains valuable vitamins and minerals. Utilize it in a soup or in gravy.

Because fish has a soft texture it is a good idea to serve something crisp with your fish dishes. Cole slaw is always a delicious and thrifty choice.

If you want to brighten an aluminum saucepan, cook tomatoes or some acid fruit in it.

An easy, economical dip for potato chips uses a cup of sieved calavo seasoned with ¼ teaspoon curry powder, 2 teaspoons of vinegar, a few drops of tabasco sauce, salt and pepper to taste.

Labor Adopts Grass Roots Program; Revision of Farm Parity Suggested

GRASS ROOTS MANIFESTO—Seven hundred small town unionists met in Washington recently, adopted a seven point manifesto, and departed for the Main Streets of America determined to marshal the support of consumer groups, including ladies' clubs, service clubs and farm organizations behind their program.

The home town unionists based their manifesto on the thesis of "equality of sacrifice for all groups." In a statement issued at the close of their meeting the group stated: "We are shocked by the cruel disregard being shown for the interests of everyday American families. We are shocked by the privilege and favoritism bestowed on a single group—big business."

One of the major points of the "grass roots" labor program: "Labor, the farmers, small business and independent consumer groups must be given full representation on all mobilization and stabilization agencies at the policy-making and administrative levels. By so doing, the government can inspire renewed public confidence and public support of controls which otherwise will be hard to take."

MAIN STREET ECONOMY—Although the situation is not too clear at the moment, there seems to be shaping up in congress a battle over the administration's budget that will strike at the Main Street level of the nation before it touches many other segments.

The joint congressional committee, which reported on the nation's economy and the proposed budget, recommended a new study of farm-price supports and reduction of federal grants to states.

Specifically, the report cited next year's budget estimate of $2,883,000,000 in federal grants to states for highways, public welfare, health, school lunches, agricultural-extension services and agricultural experiment stations, vocational rehabilitation, airports, and other services. All of these services are on the Main Street level and a cut will be felt immediately in the home towns of the nation.

Of all the questions considered in the report, farm parity was the most explosive. The report declared that legislative remedies must be sought to correct a condition which now exists by which prices increasing the cost of living and the cost of defense are geared to the industrial practices which have for many years driven up prices of industrial commodities.

Farm parity, invented at the depths of the depression, is geared to the price of industrial commodities. Revision and modernization of the law will undoubtedly be one of the big questions facing the congress.

HIGHER STILL—Every time the bureau of labor statistics announces its index figures on the cost of living they are always higher, even as administration officials repeat the old refrain that leveling off is "just around the corner."

The bureau's newest figures reported the cost of living up 1.3 per cent, setting another record. The figure was pegged at 183.8 per cent of the 1935-39 base period. This was 8 per cent higher than the level of June, 1950, before the Korean fighting began, and 9.5 per cent above a year ago.

Meanwhile, there were indications that the people in the home towns may be developing some consumer resistance to high prices. The commerce department reported a 3 per cent decline in retail sales. Department store sales were reported down 4 per cent.

Unofficial reports told of a slackening of consumer buying, possibly because many persons had stocked up heavily last year and possibly because of price climbs.

THE BORROWER—Russia flatly refused recently to return 670 American naval and cargo ships she "borrowed" under the World War II lend-lease program. The Soviet went so far as to state that the United States really does not need the ships.

Reduced to a common denominator, it is like a home town neighbor borrowing your lawn mower and refusing to return it after he has clipped his lawn, and having the nerve to tell you you don't need it anyway, because your lawn doesn't need cutting.

The ships are only one of the lend-lease problems with Russia. The Soviet still has an over-all $11 billion unsettled lease-lend account with this nation.

MACARTHUR UNDER FIRE—General Douglas MacArthur, who seems to have a knack of making controversial statements, again threw the state department and the United Nations into an uproar when he asserted he stood ready at any time to confer in the field with the commander in chief of the Chinese and North Korean forces to end the war and "find any military means whereby the realization of the political objectives of the United Nations in Korea, to which no nation may justly take exceptions, might be accomplished without further bloodshed."

The state department immediately asked the defense department and the White House to curb the general's authority to issue diplomatic overtures. The controversy was taken up in the U.N. and MacArthur was criticized by British and French newspapers.

Strong-willed MacArthur, who does not believe in hiding his genius under a blanket, had nothing to say about the criticism of his latest statement. If the state department and the United Nations persist in their demands that MacArthur be silenced permanently, it might mean that pipe-smoking Doug will have his wings clipped for the first time in his long career.

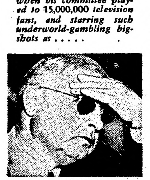
DRAFT CALL CUT—Home town draft boards were notified that their April quotas had been cut in half. The army ordered a quota of 40,000 for the month instead of the previously announced 80,000. Enlistments, running higher than were anticipated, and fewer casualties in Korea than had been feared were given as reasons for the change in the induction rate.

The army at latest reports was only about 100,000 men short of its present goal of 1,500,000 men.

Meanwhile, a congressional spokesman said the army should be able to halt the draft within 18 months and set up its universal-military-training program.

The Big Show

Sen. Estes Kefauver, (above), emcee of the senate crime investigating committee hearings in New York, provided the nation with its greatest show during recent weeks when his committee played to 15,000,000 television fans, and starring such underworld-gambling bigshots as . . . . .



Jake "Greasy Thumb" Guzick, who refused to talk,

Frank Costello, who keeps $40,000 in cash in his home, and James J. Carroll, who told unsympathetic senators that television cameras scared him. The public liked the show so much it objected when a few stations switched to a brief Easter religious service.

THE AMERICAN FARMER

Farm Plant Value Pegged at 91 Million

American farmers now own 91 billion dollars worth of land, buildings, live stock and equipment. This gigantic food "factory" turned out approximately 30 billion dollars worth of produce in 1950, or a third of the value of the "plant" itself. In 1900 and even in 1910, American agriculture produced only a sixth of its own physical value in a year. Even in prosperous 1929 it produced a little less than one-fourth of its "plant value," a recent survey revealed.

The farmer has accomplished these gains through a 900 per cent increase in his investment in tools and machinery since 1900, and by use of better methods, better seed, better livestock, and more fertilizer, the report stated.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE
by Roger C. Whitman

INSULATION IN ATTIC FLOOR

Question: Please advise whether it would be of any value to place waterproof paper between the joists in the attic (i.e., the ceilings of the rooms below) before pouring or blowing in the insulation material. I intended to do the work myself and would appreciate your advice, since it will require considerable additional work to lay the paper, and unless it will make the insulation more effective. I do not wish to go to this extra expense If you do consider this waterproof paper an advantage, would you tell me what type to use?

Answer: Your plan is entirely correct, for the paper would act as a "vapor barrier" and protect the insulation from any penetration of moisture from the house air, rising through the ceiling plaster. Get what is called vapor-proof paper, for not all waterproof papers are vapor-proof Your dealer in insulating materials will have it in stock After putting in your insulation. cover the material with tar paper or other strong paper to protect it from dust. (Insulating batts and blankets come with a vapor-proof covering.) Or you can lay flooring instead.

Black First in Favor

The most popular color for today's motor cars is still black. Green rates second in point of popularity. While in California the brighter hues outnumber plain, everyday black, a coast-to-coast survey reveals that black still reigns over the various shades of green, gray, blue and the other colors that meet the eye on the streets and highways of the nation.

Teed Off!

Sunday School Teacher—"Willie, do you know what becomes of boys who use bad language when they're playing marbles?"

ST. PAUL COOK WINS SWEEPSTAKES PRIZE AT STATE FAIR

Mr. Paul F. Newpower shows off one of his wife's cooking trophies, while she holds another of the prizes she has won. Although Mrs. Newpower is the busy mother of three growing boys, she found time to win 11 ribbons in 1950 . . . plus a Sweepstakes at the Minnesota State Fair. For prize-winning results Mrs. Newpower depends on Fleischmann's New Improved Active Dry Yeast. "This new dry yeast rises so fast," she says. "And it's so easy to use!"

When you bake at home use yeast. The delicious goodness and wholesome nourishment of yeast-raised treats make them a top family favorite. When you use yeast—use the best—Fleischmann's New Improved Active Dry Yeast. It's faster . . . easier to use. Get it when you bake at home—treat your family to delicious, nutritious yeast-raised goodies.

Electronic Lightning Alarm

An electronic alarm that tips off lightning's tricks is reported by the South African Institute of Electrical Engineers. It was developed to provide added protection for those who work with explosives, particularly South Africa's gold miners. The device can be set to warn when lightning has shown its hand within a radius of seven or 20 miles, or when an on-the-spot-flash is imminent.

Malay Archipelago

Malay Archipelago, which is the Netherlands East Indies, straddles the equator, forming a barrier between the Pacific and Indian oceans and a link between Asia and Australia. Its total land area is over two and a half times that of Texas—735,268 square miles. Its principal islands are Java, Sumatra and Borneo.

Tests Tell Soil's Need for Lime And Plant Nutrients

CHICAGO—Having your soil tested to find its plant food needs is a good deal like going to your doctor for a health checkup, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"The tests a doctor makes are important, but he doesn't depend on them alone," the statement says. "Besides taking your pulse, temperature and respiration, and checking your heart, chest and kidneys, he will ask you a lot of questions. When he has all the facts, he's ready for a diagnosis.

Tests Are Clue to Soil's Needs.

"It's pretty much the same way with your soil. If you are not getting the high crop yields you think you should, just testing the soil won't give all the answers.

"A good deal more information is necessary. Among important questions are: What crops have been grown previously? What was the per acre yield? How has the soil been handled? How about the crop rotation? Has the soil been limed? What fertilizer treatment has it had?

"Good soil tests from carefully taken samples and properly interpreted in the light of crop history can help you do a better job of liming and fertilizing your soil."

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Sagstuen Renae and Mardell were Sunday visitors at the Tony Peterson home.

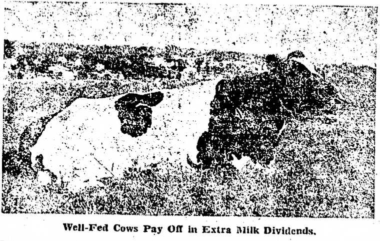
'Complete Pasture Program' Helps Cows Keep Milk Pails Full, Spring, Summer and Fall



Well-Fed Cows Pay Off in Extra Milk Dividends.

IF you want contented, cud-chewing cows that fill your milk pails, you have to supply them all the feed they need during the hours they graze. Cows don't keep on eating until they are full, points out the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. They graze only a certain period each day. If there isn't sufficient forage available to fill them in that period, then they won't be well-fed.

Surest way to provide a steady, abundant, high-quality pasture ration spring, summer and fall, is to develop a "complete pasture program," including the proper legume-grass mixtures, the use of commercial fertilizer and well-managed grazing, says Earl Jones, Ohio State University extension argonomist.

Jones recommends alfalfa, ladino clover and grass for summer grazing. Where alfalfa does not thrive, ladino clover and grass will do a good job. Timothy, brome grass or orchard grass may also be used, but Jones points out that orchard grass requires special management.

He cautions farmers to avoid killing out pasture growth by overgrazing and to provide palatable and nutritious pasture by avoiding undergrazing. Jones suggests dividing pasture areas into lots. Cattle are allowed to graze down growth in one lot and then are moved to another.

Along with good legume-grass mixtures and managed grazing, Jones emphasizes the benefits from adding lime and fertilizer according to soil tests to provide a "complete pasture program."

Buzz And The Off-Key Baritones

Reverend Lester of the church out on Hillsboro Road coaches his Young Peoples' Choir late Thursday afternoons—after high school basketball practice lets out.

Buzz Ellis pastures cows next to that church. Around 5 o'clock they used to make a lot of racket about wanting to go home. That made it kind of rough on the choir.

When Buzz learned what was going on he said to Reverend Lester: "I never yet heard of a cow that could moo on key. So, I'll just move 'em in a little earlier. . . ." This started me to thinking. Buzz doesn't go to that church. And he's so tone-deaf he couldn't carry a tune in a bucket!

From where I sit, you might say that Buzz didn't have much in common with those singers. But he doesn't divide folks into groups he's "with" or "agin." Your politics, your personal preferences—or the fact that you like a moderate glass of beer—mean nothing either way to Buzz. He's a real neighbor to everybody!

Otter Tales

By... Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

Doing my "high wire" act this winter, I couldn't help thinking about the tremendous job the boys on the poles were doing to keep me going. Then my old pal, Cedric Adams, put it all into words in the March 11 issue of the MINNEAPOLIS TRIBUNE; here's what Cedric wrote:

"Things have been tough for the telephone and electrical linemen this year because of heavy snows and intense cold, so let's give these deserving guys a pat on the back. Their work ranks right at the top among public service jobs, and yet we rarely credit them with the job they do.

"Tough, exacting work they do under extremely hazardous conditions. Restoration work on lines following storms is always filled with potential personal danger. Frequently in sleet and wind storms, live power wires drop down across telephone lines or make contact with lines swinging in the wind.

"Climbing an icy pole through a maze of sleet-coated wires in sub-zero temperatures with a bitter wind blowing isn't what you'd call a sedentary job. Linemen are away from home a lot, too.

"Today's lineman is usually a young GI about 28, with a wife and family whom he sees not much more often than once or twice a week. The lineman starts as a "groundman", learns the name and uses of tools and materials, digs holes, pulls underground cable into conduit, breaks up pavement and so on. Then he's taught to climb, is schooled in first aid, then starts setting poles and stringing wire."

Thanks, Cedric, for those nice words. I know at least two Otter Tail boys who will appreciate it. Bob Nygard and Bud Akers had to abandon their pick-up truck 3½ miles south of Fessenden one night recently, in a blizzard, and walk to town. "It wasn't too bad," Nygard told a reporter from the HARVEY HERALD. "Anyway, who ever heard of any of our power company crew not being able to take care of himself in any weather?"

The boys are sure courageous — they are the heroes in the big battle against wind and weather.

"Please take us on a hike, teacher" were the shouts of the third and fourth graders one day. So off we trudged, all 29 of us. It was a beautiful morning aad we all enjoyed it. Looking for signs of spring was a lot of fun.

Wednesday the 3rd and 4th graders were having quite a time finger painting. Many of the children had to get the receipe for the paint. Here's hoping the mothers didn't get too much of a mess.

We saw three educational films on Tuesday, "Arizona" which showed scenic places and winter and summer sports, "The Air Fleet" and "Trails of Manatoc" Myron Gunheim repaired our projector and also took time off to teach us to operate it.

As our school ground dries we see more groups playing kitten-ball. We have added light, medium and heavy bats and two new kitten balls to our play ground equipment.

Grades 7 and 8 have finished their Science books. They are now spending their period on "Health".

Attention Farmers

Due to blocked roads in the southern part of the state, the State Committee extended the deadline for signing up the 1951 farm plan until April 30, 1951, stated A. E. Strandquist Chairman of the Marshall County Production Marketing Administration. He also stated that the PMA Office will be open on Saturday from 8 to 12 noon in the future

Farm and Household Employees Come Under Social Security

Elmer F. Kelm, Collector of Internal Revenue for the District of Minnesota, reminded farm and household employers that they must report wages and pay Federal social security taxes on those farm and household employees who were brought into the old-age and survivors insurance system on January 1, 1951. Whether or not a farm or household employee's wages are subject to the taxes depends on the number of days worked for the employer and the amount of cash earnings. The Federal social security tax and information return for the period of January, February and March is due on or before April 30, 1951 together with payment of the taxes.

A farm employer should make a return on Form 941 reporting the cash wages paid to each employee who meets all three of the following tests:

(A) He was employed by the employer (whether or not doing farm work) continuously throughout the quarterly period of October, November, December, 1950; and

(B) He was employed by such employer in agricultural labor on a full time basis for at least 60 days in the quarterly period of January February, March, 1951; and

(C) His cash earnings for such agricultural labor are $50 or more. This three-part test of liability applies not only to agricultural workers, but also to household employees in a private home on a farm which is operated for profit.

A different test, sometimes called the "$50-24-day test", should be used in determining whether or not the taxes apply to cash wages paid by an employer for household work in a private home which is not on a farm operated for profit. The employer should make a return reporting the cash wages for household work performed after 1950 paid to each employee (A) who received from such employer, during the quarterly period of January, February, March 1951, $50 or more in cash wages for household work and (b) who performed household work for such employer on 24 or more different days in that quarter or on 24 or more different days in the quarter of October-November-December, 1950. If the employer also pays wages to business employees who he reports on Form 941, he may include the household employees on the same form. Otherwise, the employer should report the household employees on a return Form 942.

Every farm employer or household employer who is required to file a return form to use for this purpose, should promptly request a form from the Collector of Internal Revenue, and should specify whether farm help or domestic help is employed. All such requests should be sent to the Collector of Internal Revenue, St. Paul 1, Minnesota.

Plug-In Light New Auto Idea

A portable spotlight, that plugs into the automobile cigarette lighter (arrow, lower right) and furnishes brilliant illumination, is introduced by Chevrolet in its 1951 accessory line. Demonstrated here by Marjorie Zupner, the chrome-plated light comes with enough wire for use all around the car as a trouble lamp, or as a spotlight from inside the car.

Asks Piggy Bank Pennies Be Circulated

Nellie Tayloe Ross, Director of the United States Mint, today issued an appeal for the return to circulation of the millions of copper one-cent pieces believed to be stored in piggy-banks, sugar bowls and bureau drawers of American homes. The release of these coins would obviate the manufacturing cost of replacing them for circulation, and would save large quantities of copper greatly needed in the defense effort.

Since the beginning of Communist aggression in Korea, Director Ross pointed out, the demand for new coins has quadrupled. During the first eight months of the fiscal year, deliveries of coins from the three minting establishments totaled 1,115,000,000 pieces, one of the heaviest delivery periods in the history of the Mint. Over 857,000,000 of these coins were one-cent pieces. Deliveries of pennies in February, usually a dull month in the retail trade, totaled 33,000,000 coins. As defense spending gets into full swing, the demand for new coins is expected to increase proportionately.

Director Ross expressed the hope that banks, newspapers and other business enterpries will aid in the drive to restore hoarded pennies to circulation.

16 Day Beaver Season Announced

Regulations for the taking of beaver for a 16 day period in 24 northern counties and a 26 day season in Koochiching county have been announced by Chester S. Wilson, commissioner of Conservation.

Kittson, Marshall and Roseau Counties will be open from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. starting April 15 and including April 30.

Not more than ten beaver may be taken by any licensed trapper, and all beaver must be submitted, with both front feet intact and attached to the hide, to a game warden or other authorized agent of the Game and Fish division for sealing within five days after the close of the season.

Traps cannot be set in, upon or closer than six feet from the water line of any beaver house. It is illegal to molest or damage a beaver house.

Game refuges and state parks within the opened areas are closed to beaver trapping.

HADACOL Is Requested By Nurses

HADACOL Helps Folks Suffering Deficiencies of Vitamins B₁, B₂, Niacin and Iron.

Mrs. Lovett

Registered nurses, in increasing numbers, are showing a keen interest in HADACOL and in the results that are being secured with this great modern formula. Requests have been received from many of these nurses for professional samples of HADACOL and many of them indicated that they recommend the HADACOL formula to patients who are deficient in Vitamins B₁, B₂, Iron and Niacin.

Mrs. L. D. Lovett, a registered nurse who lives at 2205 Walnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pennsylvania, says this about HADACOL:

"I was down in Florida for the past month. I had no energy so several members of my family told me to try a bottle of HADACOL. My sister, who is a nurse, was taking a bottle so I tried a bottle. I feel fine since taking HADACOL. I do private duty here. I am 50 years old."

HADACOL can help you, if you suffer such deficiencies. Ask your druggist for HADACOL today. Only HADACOL gives you that "Wonderful HADACOL feeling."

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 family economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied. Adv.

DO YOU HATE CHANGE of LIFE? and HOT FLUSHES?

Do you suffer from hot flushes, nervous tension, upset emotions due to functional 'change of life' (38-52 years)—that period when fertility ebbs away, when embarrassing symptoms of this nature may betray your age?

Then start taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms. No other medicine of this type for women has such a long record of success. Taken regularly, Pinkham's Compound helps build up resistance against this annoying middle-age distress. Truly the woman's friend!

Church Women to Survey Local Employment on Fellowship Day

Church women in hundreds of home towns in the nation will take a "show of hands" on May Fellowship Day (Friday, May 9) to find out what they are doing and what they can do in the national defense program.

At their May Fellowship Day meetings, the women will ask themselves such questions as these:

"Am I folding my hands in complacency?"

"Am I wringing my hands in helpless fear and self-pity?"

"Or, am I putting my hands to some task or joining hands with other Christians to do bigger jobs?"

When these questions are answered the women will begin planning what they can do—as workers employers, consumers and Christian citizens to help their families, their home towns, and the nation.

May Fellowship Day is sponsored by the general department of United Church Women of the National Council of the Church of Christ in the U.S.A. The general department is the national organization for women of over 80 Protestant denominations in nearly 1,800 state and local councils of church women.

On May Fellowship Day last year, the women began a two-year study of economics as the concern of Christian women. This year their emphasis has shifted from a survey of local employment, child labor and other general conditions to the place of women in the national economy. What they learned of their communities during the past year may have great bearing on the future of many home towns of the nation.

Mrs. George B. Martin, of Summit, N.J., national chairman of the committee for the annual May observance, citing figures from a fact book, "Women at Work," prepared for use in the year's survey, pointed out that 19,000,000 women make up 30 per cent of the U.S. labor force at present and 37,000,000 more, listed as "non-workers," form a large source of labor that could be drawn on for defense.

At least 90 per cent of all nurses, medical and laboratory technicians, household employees and telephone operators are women; so are the majority of office workers, retail clerks, teachers, restaurant and hotel workers.

One of the questions the women will be concerned with, Mrs. Martin says, is whether their own church—the home town churches—as employers, maintain standards consistent with those they advocate for other kinds of employment in the community—in conditions of work, salary and wage scales, retirement arrangements and vacation time.

As volunteers, women are important not only in the churches, but also in social welfare and civic organizations of their communities. In the national defense program they will be called upon for civilian defense, Red Cross work and similar jobs.

If price control and rationing boards are set up in communities, women serving on them do an important job in presenting the consumers' point of view.

Mrs. Martin points out, "It is important to write to our congressmen. It is just as important to express our point of view at our dinner tables and to carry out our beliefs in our home towns."

JAPANESE AGRICULTURE

Church Endowed School Starts Experiment in Japanese Farming

Agriculture remains one of post-war Japan's most pressing problems. In a country whose total land area is less than the size of the state of California and whose population numbers more than 80 million people, Japan has only 16 per cent of arable land. Although the country never attained food efficiency before World War II, it could safely rely on food imports to balance that deficit. Now former overseas sources of supply are no longer readily available, so maximum production of food is one of Japan's most urgent needs.

To meet some of these agricultural needs will be a task facing the new International Christian University which is now under construction at Mitaka, near Tokyo, and is being financed by Christian denominational boards and church groups in the United States and Canada.

Under a five-year farm development program the university's 350-acre campus will be cultivated for agricultural experiment purposes. In addition to carrying out educational experimentation on the 185 acres under cultivation, the university's community will "live off" its land to the extent that faculty and student body will work and eat the food raised on the farms. The incomes and products of these farms will also help pay running costs of the experimental program.

Harold W. Hackett, vice president of financial affairs of ICU, recently reported to the foundation in New York:

"When we came onto the property at Mitaka on July 1, 1950, the valley across the stream below the Taizanso area was already planted with rice. Twenty-eight families had rice paddy fields there with the rice crop to be harvested in November. We made arrangement with them to continue the cultivation of their crop with access to their fields through ICU grounds. There were some 80 members of the various families. In exchange they were to act as non-commissioned guards for the property with authority to police the property from trespassing and vandalism. The plan worked smoothly and the crop was harvested.

"As a token of appreciation for the ICU consideration in this matter a representative of the group brought to the ICU office an amount of 330 kilograms of rice. This rice was sold at the market price to the members of the staff and the income of 12,960 yen ($36.00) is recorded.

"The story and incident is of importance not for the amount of money involved," Hackett included, "but an indication of the goodwill of these people who are looking for what ICU can mean to the community and possibly to their children in the future."

Rice, Wheat, Barley Are Basic Crops

Important and basic crops such as rice, wheat, barley, sweet potatoes and Japanese radishes (Daikon), will be grown on the university's farms. Livestock and poultry will provide milk, eggs and meat. ICU, for example, will keep milk cows to supply 3,000 persons per day.

But the university's farms will do more than sustain the community. Its farms are also expected to exert an educational influence beyond the confines of the campus through the publication of bulletins and reports which will make agriculture information available to Japanese farmers. Moreover, the farm program will include study in allied fields. Seventy-three acres of forest lands, for instance, will be used for forest experimentation, and surrounding rice paddies for horticultural and fishery research. The school will combine learning with life through projects requiring labor.

AROUND THE HOUSE

An unforgettable filling for popovers or hot biscuits is creamed ham and a garnish of green asparagus tips. Both may be leftovers from Sunday dinner.

Frankfurter scallop is easily made with sliced frankfurters and scalloped potatoes. Add about one tablespoon of prepared mustard to each cup of white sauce used.

Crisp, cooked bacon slivers added to your French dressing give a novel flavor to vegetable or citrus fruit salads. You may also add a bit of condensed tomato soup to it if you like the richness.

Loose crumbs mixed in through the frosting spoil the appearance of many a good cake. Let cake cool, then brush crumbs with one hand while holding with the other one.

To clean a parchment shade, rub it with a fresh piece of white bread or an art-gum eraser, or with a cloth dipped in milk. In any case, be sure to brace the inside of the shade with one hand while you rub with the other, or you may poke the rubbing hand right through.

Add some finely chopped spinach to pancake batter and make spinach pancakes. Serve with pot roast or as a vegetable. This is guaranteed to make spinach a favorite even amongst those hard to convert.

Chopped liver seasoned and mixed with bread crumbs and egg makes a first rate main dish especially when the patties are wrapped in bacon and cooked with tomato sauce.

Frostings and icings should be cooled before being spread on the cake; otherwise, they may soak into cake.

Chocolate or butter cakes are lovely when you sprinkle confectioners' sugar immediately after taking them from the oven. If sprinkled over a lace doily, the sugar leaves a pattern.

If an oil lamp flickers a lot, pour a teaspoonful of salt into the base.

Stella Moore and Nurse Carol, fleeing the Thorndyke mansion where Stella has been masquerading as Dorinda LaCroix, the granddaughter of old Mrs. Thorndyke, stop at an all-night hamburger stand to determine if a car which was behind them was actually pursuing them. Three mysterious deaths have excited and alarmed the women. The car stops and Edward Thorndyke, old Mrs. Thorndyke's son and the man who had employed Stella to play out the masquerade to save Mrs. Thorndyke from the shock of knowing the real Dorinda is dead, enters the restaurant. He chides Stella for not reporting her suspicions to him and drives her to the home of Cleve Adams where Mrs. Adams takes her in.

CHAPTER XVIII

"We've got a girl here who needs a lot of sleep, Mother. We'll leave explanations until tomorrow. If you've an extra nightie or pajamas or whatever it is you gals wear, drag it out and tuck our little neighbor into bed." Dorinda caught the warning glance he shot at his mother.

Mrs. Adams asked no more questions. She produced a white nightdress "reserved especially for visitors who don't bring their own," she told Dorinda gaily; she escorted the girl to a guest room down the hall and helped her undress; she went to the door and took the glass of hot milk Cleve brought, and watched Dorinda as she drank it.

Finally she tucked her into bed and, bending over, kissed her cheek. "Good night, my dear," she said gently and left her.

"You needn't feel afraid any more." The echo of Cleve's words was the last thing Dorinda remembered that night. "You needn't feel afraid—"

She slept the deep dreamless sleep which comes with relaxation from strain and did not awake until morning drew a penciled line of sunlight across her face and her eyes opened and blinked in its blinding dazzle.

She felt rested and hungry. Dressed again in the brown pullover and skirt, she ran downstairs. The front door stood open to the soft spring air and beyond the protecting screen she could see Cleve pacing up and down the porch, whistling softly to himself.

He looked around at her call and hurried inside. The screen door closed behind him with a bang. She watched him come, a little stab of pain at her heart. If he could always be this close, always where he could come at her call. But would he want to be—after today? She shook her head driving away the thought. They were together now. She would pretend that now was all that mattered.

"I've been waiting for you." Cleve's voice was a caress. "Mother has already gone to Trentville, marketing. How do you feel?"

"Hungry," she laughed.

"Good!" But as she looked up at him, she saw the frown that creased his forehead.

Sheriff Asks Dorinda About Night's Events

"Dorinda," he asked abruptly. "Did you see Lana last night?"

"Lana!" she repeated in surprise. "Why, no. I haven't seen her since she went out yesterday before lunch. What makes you ask?"

"She seems to be missing. Your Aunt Harriet phoned this morning. She said Lana'd been gone all night and she seemed to think you must know something about it since you'd been gone, too. Although she admitted Mr. Thorndyke had told her where you were and that you didn't know anything about Lana's absence."

"I certainly don't," she assured him. "She never tells me—nor anyone else I should judge from what her mother says—where she's going or when she'll be back."

"I told your aunt I was sure you hadn't seen her. I advised her to call Poole—he must be back by now—and she said she would. She was terribly upset. She said Lana's never stayed away all night before."

"It's queer. Cleve, you don't suppose she was one of the persons Carol heard—whispering?"

His face hardened. "It doesn't seem likely. Why on earth would Lana have it in for you? You haven't interfered with any of her plans, have you?"

"I'm sure I haven't. She's always away. About the only time we meet is at meals. I don't suppose we exchange half a dozen sentences a day. You know, Cleve, I can't believe she's really missing. She's probably stayed all night some place and will show up soon."

"I think so myself. Let's not worry until we know there's something to worry about." He piloted Dorinda toward a door a short distance down the hall. "Breakfast, Myrtle, and plenty of it," he shouted kitchenward.

Twenty minutes later she pushed back her plate. "What a breakfast!" She sighed. "It's wonderful being here, Cleve. I feel so free."

"Only one word from you and the place is yours for life. You—" He stopped as Myrtle poked her black head through the door.

"That sheriff man's here to see you, Mr. Cleve."

"Oh, bother," Cleve grumbled, "just when I had you, helpless with food, at my mercy!"

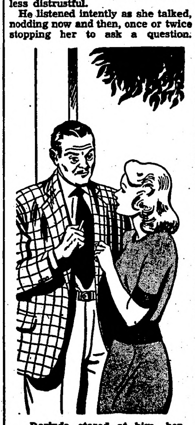
But Dorinda noticed how swiftly he put down his napkin and sprang to his feet. He dropped a quick kiss on her hair as he passed. "See you later, sweet. Don't run away."

When she finished drinking her coffee and went out into the hall, she could see the two men standing on the front porch apparently absorbed in conversation. But Poole, as if he had eyes in the back of his head, wheeled around and at his imperative "Miss LaCroix," she went slowly toward him.

"Cleve's been telling me about your experience last night," the sheriff said gravely. He pushed his big hat back upon his grizzled hair, hooked a thumb in his leather belt. "Suppose you tell me the whole thing just as it happened."

She sat down in the porch swing. She felt more at ease with Poole this morning than she had on the two previous occasions he had questioned her. He seemed milder, less distrustful.

He listened intently as she talked, nodding now and then, once or twice stopping her to ask a question.



Dorinda stared at him, her brown eyes wide with amazement.

When she had finished, he rubbed his chin contemplatively and said, "Thank you, Miss LaCroix. I think that's quite clear."

He took a step toward the porch steps, paused as Dorinda cried anxiously, "But Mr. Poole, who do you think it was in the hall last night? Cleve's told me that Lana's disappeared. Do you think—?"

"I think we'll find Lana Thorndyke without any trouble," he assured her grimly. "Don't worry about it, Miss LaCroix. If I don't miss my guess, we'll have this whole mess cleared up in the next twenty-four hours." His wide mouth twitched. "That's not for publication though." He lifted two fingers to his hat brim.

Cleve followed him out to his car, stood talking for a few minutes and then ensconced himself comfortably in the seat beside the driver to continue the conversation.

Edward Tells Dorinda Of Life With Mother

Trixie came and jumped up in the swing beside Dorinda, and kissed her hand with a moist pink tongue. "Where's Randy, Trix?" the girl asked mournfully but the dog only wagged her stumpy tail and pushed her head against the girl's arm.

The sun was warm against Dorinda's fair hair. She leaned back against the pillows, one hand on Trixie's rough coat, surrendering to the peaceful quiet of the morning. It was there Edward found her when he came up the porch steps.

She sat up suddenly, blinking at him, half asleep. Cleve and Poole were gone. Trixie, curled up beside her, barked protestingly as she moved.

Edward looked at her anxiously. "You're all right?" He pushed the dog out of his way and sat down beside Dorinda in the swing. His glance swept to the open door, to the closed windows overlooking the porch. "It seems private enough here. Where is everyone?"

"Mrs. Adams has gone to market. I don't know where Cleve is. I think he's gone away with the sheriff. They were here a little while ago. I must have gone to sleep."

He nodded, satisfied. "No wonder you're tired, poor child, after last night." His face looked pale and tired beneath his smooth black hair. "I've had a hellish morning, Dorinda. Lana seems to have run away, the little fool, and Harriet has been having hysterics all over the place. I'm not worried about the girl particularly. I think she has a peculiar ability to look after her own interests, but it's the inconsiderateness of her going off just at this time. Naturally, it can't help but make Poole more suspicious of us all."

His dark eyes met hers and slid away. "I don't demand a great deal of life, Dorinda. Just peace and what I consider a reasonable amount of comfort. Sometimes it seems to me that everyone around me is in a conspiracy to destroy the things I value." His lips were set in morose lines of self-pity.

"But that isn't what I came for." He cleared his throat uneasily. "The time has come when I've got to tell you a few things, my dear. It—it's not exactly pleasant for me but I can't evade it any longer. What I have to say is partly an explanation, partly a confession."

He sat upright, one plump hand on either knee. She looked down at his round white fingers, seeing, without knowing she saw, the well manicured nails, the fine black hairs along the third finger joints.

"I loved my mother, Dorinda. But in her way she was a hard woman. Perhaps not hard, but inflexible. She didn't believe in sycophants, she didn't want her children ever to think they must cater to her, yield to her whims for the sake of favors received. She wanted us to be free to live our own lives. Underneath this may have been the feeling that she didn't want anyone to look forward to her death or be placed in the position of waiting for her to die.

"When I finished college, she made over to me my half of the money my father had left. She would have done the same for my sister except that Laura made an early marriage to a wealthy man. Mother had a little money of her own which came from her own family. She would have made it suffice if necessary even though it meant a simpler mode of living. In her will that money was designed for charity.

"At any rate, it was understood that the other half of my father's fortune was to go to Laura or any children she might have. I had had my share."

Edward shifted nervously. He got up and walked over to the porch rail, staring out over the clipped turf. When he turned back to Dorinda, he remained on his feet, leaning against one of the square painted posts which supported the roof.

Tries to Rationalize Decision to Deceive

"Apparently, I wasn't as wise as I thought — or as my mother thought. I know she had expected me to go into some business or profession of my own or to at least leave the money in the safe and conservative investments my father had made. But I traveled, I enjoyed life. I had what no doubt you would consider a great deal of money. But I didn't think it enough. I wanted to double it. It isn't necessary to go into details. I speculated—and lost.

He frowned moodily. "However, that's beside the point. The years went by and somehow I hadn't broached the subject which was constantly on my mind. It was difficult.

"Then the war in Europe came. Laura died and Mother became critically ill. I went after my sister's child. You know what happened. I was in a panic. We didn't tell Mother that Dorinda was dead. It would have killed her. And by the terms of her will, if Dorinda died before my mother, the money would have been divided among a number of charitable institutions she favored. It was then the inspiration came to me to find a substitute granddaughter—you."

Edward smoothed back his black hair in his familiar gesture. He came back to the porch swing and sat down close beside Dorinda and went on in a lowered voice. "Believe me, I meant no harm. In the beginning my only thought was to prolong my mother's life. As I told you, I loved my mother. And I had to have time to persuade her to change her will.

"But after you came and the impersonation was so successful, the idea came to me that even if I failed with Mother, and that fear was always with me, there seemed to be no reason why we shouldn't go on as we were. You were my mother's heiress, you'd have the money. If we divided it—"

"Good Heavens!" Dorinda stared at him, her brown eyes wide with amazement. "You didn't think I'd take the money, that I'd stay there, that I'd be Dorinda always, did you?" She was too astonished to be angry.

"It's not worth that much to me. To play a part all my life—"

"You'd get used to it. After awhile you'd have believed you really were Dorinda. And neither of us would have been in a position to betray the other. I believe it would have been a wise and successful venture, only—" He paused, moistening his lips.

"Only!" she repeated softly, her eyes filled with the horror of a dawning realization. "Only someone wanted your mother's heiress out of the way. If I had died—who'd get the money?"

Uncle Sam Says

Farming today requires great skill on the part of the farmer. Not only must he know soils, fertilizers, and seeds, but he must be an expert mechanic to operate all types of farm machinery. In other words, a farmer works hard for his money and in a highly speculative business. He should make that money work for him—in a non-speculative and safe investment. U. S. Mr. Louwagie, who milks 12 to 15 cows on his 248 acre farm near Melroy, says: "If it wasn't for LAND O'LAKES, it's hard to say what we'd get for cream. Through LAND O'LAKES, we farmers get full value for our products."

Yes, LAND O'LAKES owner-patrons like Maurice Louwagie have learned that it pays to deal with their own organization. They save on processing, distributing and marketing their products. They get quality improvement help. They receive higher butterfat returns and above all . . . fair treatment!

So take a tip from farmers who have tried them all . . . sell your milk or cream through LAND O'LAKES. It pays!

How Aging Is Shown

Aging is shown in body cells in several ways. Many people shrink with age. Others will put on bulk with the years. Those who shrink live longer. And this is the reason. Instead of shrinking, some cells may collect and store up dull, inert material like calcium, the little brown granules in the cells of the heart, and especially fat. This kind of aging causes more trouble than quiet shrinking. Aging is well on its way when fatty substances collect in the cells and in the arteries, particularly in their inside lining. This is one form of hardening of the arteries.

Save the Fish Oil

Don't throw away the oil that comes on canned fish, such as tuna, salmon and sardines. Use it in cream sauce to serve with the fish, in cooked salad dressings for fish, or to moisten the fish with it for sandwich fillings.

If it is Printing we can do it and do it right

Washington Tip

To save wear on buttons and garments, and avoid cutting wringer rolls with broken buttons, button each garment and turn it wrong side out before putting it into the washing machine.

Peterson-Anderson Vows Spoken

Marriage vows were exchanged Saturday, April 14, at 4 P. M. in the Gethsemane Lutheran Church. Upsala, Minn., by Alice Jean Peterson daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Peterson of Holt, and Lorell Dale Anderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Anderson of Minneapolis.

Rev. E. Edward Tornow officiated at the double ring ceremony. Pre-nuptial music and the traditional wedding marches were played by Mrs. James Swanson who also accompanied Mr. George Otterdahl, uncle of the groom, who sang "Oh, Promise Me" and "The Lord's Prayer".

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her gown of starched chiffon over taffeta was fashioned with a jewelry neckline, beaded bodice and full train. Her fingertip veil was shirred on a beaded cap. Her only jewelry was a single strand of pearls, gift of the groom. She carried a cascade bouquet of pink rosebuds and a lace handkerchief.

The bride was attended by her sister. Margaret Peterson, who wore a gown of Nile green marquisette over taffeta and carried a cascade bouquet of pink carnations. Shirley Larson, friend of the bride, and Elaine Otterdahl, cousin of the groom, were bridesmaids. Their gowns and bouquets were identical to those of the maid of honor.

The groom was attended by a close friend, Winton Hagstrom. Roland Olafson and Wallace Peterson usherod. The gentlemen wore white dinner jackets, black trousers and white carnation boutonnieres.

The bride's mother wore a dusty rose crepe dress with navy blue accessories and the groom's mother wore a grey-blue crepe dress with pink and navy accessories. Their corsages were of pink carnations and yellow and red tea roses.

A reception for about a hundred guests was held in the church parlors immediately following the ceremony. The bridal table was decorated with pink and white streamers and centered by a three-tiered wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and gooom. Waitresses were Delores Engen, Marilyn and Muriel Berg, Burnell Westman, Marjorie Peterson and Patty Madsen. Doreen Christenson, friend of the bride, poured. Mrs. George Otterhahl, aunt of the groom, cut the wedding cake. Phillis Carlson had charge of the guest book.

For traveling, the bride chose a luggage brown checked suit with brown accessories. The couple left for a short wedding trip.

The bride is a graduate of the Newfolden High School, and attended the University of Minnesota She is employed by the First National Bank of Minneapolis. The groom is a graduate of Upsala High School. He is employed by Land O'Lakes Creameries at Minneapolis.

The couple will be at home at 3849 - 30th Ave. So., Minneapolis after May 1st.

Out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Vern Chamberlin and Linda, Mrs. Alma Sorenson, Miss Gladys Ness, Miss Marguerite Gripne, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Heins, Mrs. Nels Hegberg, Mr. and Mrs. Nordahl Flaten, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Hokenson, Mrs. Olivia Clear, Donald and Deanna, Andrew Lund, Dennis Holmen and Rhoda Gulseth all of Minneapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Peterson, Jimmy and Gary and Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Peterson of St. Paul: Mrs. Ralph Hagen of Gatzke; Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Emerson of Hackensack; Mr. and Mrs. Sigfred Anderson, Jean and Sharon of Albert Lea; Mr. and Mrs. George Otterdahl and Dale, Mrs. Roland Agnew and Joan, Mr. and Mrs. Connie Undem of Little Sauk and Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Nielson of Starbuck.

304 Arrests For Drunken Driving

Conviction on charges of drunken driving resulted in 304 Minnesota motorists losing their driving permits during the month of March, according to the monthly report of the drivers license division of the Department of Highways. These amounted to 93 per cent of the total 327 revocations imposed for major driving infractions.

Driving permits of 1,467 additional motorists were suspended for 30 days or more for various other violations of the laws governing usage of streets and highways. Chief causes for suspension were noncompliance with the safety responsibility and financial responsiblity requirements of the drivers license laws, with 1,161 failing to meet with the minimum standards imposed for their own protection and that of other motorists. Conviction for speeding resulted in 123 motorists having their permits suspended.

Driving examinations were given 5,467 applicants, with 3,741 passing the "inside" tests, while 2,007 of the 3,255 taking the road tests satisfactorily completed that phase of the examination.

Dear friends:

It was a great pleasure to me to see and chat with you all the other night.

You gave me a lot of inspiration for a new and brighter outlook for the present and the future.

It surely helps a lot to see dear friends when a person is sick and away from loved ones so I hope you will make your visits more often. Miss Larson, our head nurse, said the large room downstairs is available for us to visit in whenever you come.

So again, I want to say Thank You for coming and making my evening a happy one.

God Bless You
Your friend,
Margaret.

Dairymen Set Sights On Nationwide Needs

Widespread distribution of dairy foods on an equitable basis to fulfill the needs of every household in America is a tremendous task according to John Brandt, president of Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc. There's a brand new multi-million segment of population to be reached every month of the year he adds.

Brandt cites these figures: In the past decade 13½ million old customers have died; more than 17 million marriages have taken place; over 30 million babies have been born; more than one-third of all present families have been formed. We sell to an ever-changing parade, not a grandstand, he said.

In pointing up the reasons for greater advertising and public relations Brandt showed the short memory of America's 160 million people. He said 63% do not remember World War I; 48% do not remember conditions before World War II; 44% are experiencing for the first time a free market in which they can buy what they want.

To help meet this situation, dairy farmers of Minnesota are uniting this year with farm neighbors across the country in backing the plan for more educational advertising and better public understanding of the dairy farmer and his problems through the American Dairy Association.

To finance this plan the dairy farmers of the nation have authorized a 60-day Set-Aside of one cent a pound on all butterfat sold during May and June in 1951.

Emerson Man Wins Sweepstakes

Governor Luther Youngdahl has just about wiped gambling off Minnesota's map, but he can't do that in Canada, and because he can't an Emerson immigration man won the Irish sweepstakes this week and a huge sum of money.

Ernest Reed, Canadian Immigration official stationed at Emerson, who is likely known to many here, bought an Irish sweepstakes ticket that cost him $1.00. Last Saturday he was notified by Eire, Ireland officials who operate the big horse race, that his horse "Coin Nickle" had won the race on a 40 to 1 odd bet and as a result he had won $147,000.00 which would be paid to him in cash within 21 days time.

Since the Irish sweepstakes is conducted as a hospital benefit, the money he won is tax exempt, and Mr. Reed will be able to keep his entire winnings. Winnipeg papers carried the story of his amazing win last Monday.

Mr. Reed is 26 years of age, and listen girls—he is not married. Now they'll be making goo-goo eyes across the border without reporting. —Hallock Enterprise

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Sheriff Poole interrogates Stella Moore about events which led to her fleeing from the Thorndyke house where, at the request of Edward Thorndyke, she was masquerading as Dorinda LaCroix, to save Edward's mother and Dorinda's grandmother from what might be a fatal shock if she learned the real Dorinda had died. Mrs. Thorndyke does learn, however, and she, a salesman who recognized Stella on the street and Stella's friend, Anne Delahay, have mysteriously lost their lives. Edward tells the real story of the motive leading up to his decision to deceive his mother about Dorinda. Stella finds that money was the eventual motive for the strange deception.

CHAPTER XIX

"I would," he acknowledged miserably. "As Dorinda's nearest relative. But I would never have hurt you, child, not for anything in the world. You do believe that, don't you?"

"Yes, I believe that." She was trembling but her voice did not waver. "But there's someone else—the woman you're to marry—"

The screen door was pushed open. Cleve came out on the porch. Dorinda's brief surprise that he had not gone away was forgotten when he blurted, "Mr. Thorndyke, the sheriff's back at Thorndyke House and he just phoned. I know this will be a shock but I have to tell you. Fay—your cousin Fay has committed suicide."

Edward rose slowly to his feet. His heavy shoulders sagged, his black eyes looked stupid as if he were unable to grasp the meaning of Cleve's words.

"You said—you said—" he stammered.

"I say Fay Thorndyke has committed suicide," Cleve told him patiently.

"But . . . she wouldn't. Not Fay. She wouldn't do that."

"She left a note, Mr. Thorndyke. A suicide note. Poole read it to me over the telephone."

"A note?" Edward's words were barely understandable. "Did she say why—why she did it?"

"Well, I can't remember exactly how the note was worded. There was something about feeling you had ceased to care for her; that all she had done for your sake had been useless and she couldn't go on."

"All she has done for my sake? Did she say what she meant?"

"Yes," Cleve said bluntly. "She meant she had tried to kill Dorinda so that your mother's money would come to you. She didn't go into details, simply said she had mistaken Anne for her the day she pushed the boulder over the bluff. And that the other time—last night—Dorinda escaped somehow."

Edward Confesses That He Never 'Knew' Fay

Edward's sombre stare rested upon them for a moment, then he walked over to the porch steps and stood there with his back toward them. Dorinda sensed that he was thinking desperately. Minutes passed before he turned. He passed his hand across his forehead.

"I feel—confused," he admitted. "Perhaps in the last analysis all that happened has been my fault. Fay may have some ground for her belief. I did not care for her but after all, a man can't keep love burning at white heat year after year. Romance becomes a little tarnished in time."

His broad chest lifted in a troubled breath. "As to the other thing, I must own suspicion touched me once or twice. But I couldn't believe it, I didn't want to believe it. I preferred to think Miss Delahay's death was an accident."

Dorinda broke in suddenly. "But Fay couldn't have been there the day Anne was killed. Don't you remember, you'd gone to Monterey. She was with you that afternoon. You told the sheriff you were together all the time."

"I know I did. But it wasn't strictly true. Fay left me almost as soon as we arrived in Monterey. She wanted to do some shopping, she said, and told me to meet her at five. I remember she was late for the appointment—it was nearer six than five when she came. She wouldn't have had any time to spare but she could have made it to Thorndyke House and back. I didn't think it necessary to tell Poole we'd separated. I hadn't a shadow of suspicion of her then and I thought a mutual alibi would avoid awkwardness."

He hesitated. "I hate to go back. But I suppose I must. Poole will want to know the things I've just told you." He pulled his lips into a grotesque attempt at a smile and went down the porch steps.

Cleve watched the black sedan as it drove away. "After the first shock, the gentleman regained what he would probably call his equanimity rather quickly, don't you think? I don't believe his was a deathless passion."

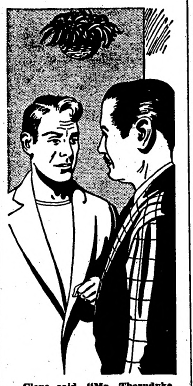
"He said he no longer loved her as much. Maybe he no longer loved her at all," Dorinda agreed soberly. "I can see how a man could be fascinated for awhile. She was lovely, Cleve. But she wasn't very agreeable. Grandmother said she was—cold."

"I can't imagine her driven to desperation though. She just didn't seem the type," Cleve said doubtfully.

"I don't think anyone really knew her. I do think she loved Edward. But she didn't like me. Sometimes I thought she hated me. Maybe that made it easier—"

"You're not to think about that part of it any more, honey. That reminds me, Poole said to tell you the inquest had been postponed. It was set for this morning, you remember."

"It seems to me you and the sheriff are getting quite chummy. You almost quarreled that first day, but now—"



Cleve said, "Mr. Thorndyke, I know this will be a shock."

"Oh, we've formed a sort of a mutual alliance," Cleve interrupted. "I help him; he helps me by looking after my girl. Though he was off in his calculations last night. As soon as he got over being suspicious of you and me, Poole was all right." He laughed shortly. "Don't think Poole is telling everything he knows or suspects though. I'm anxious to see him again. Maybe now that the case is washed up he'll divulge all. There are lots of things which need explaining but he'll work it out. Poole's a darn smart guy if you ask me."

Story of Yellow Wig Explains Many Things

"Maybe, but he had to wait for a confession before he knew what it was all about. Tell me, Cleve—" Distaste struggled with curiosity for a moment. Curiosity won. "How did Fay, I mean, how did it happen?"

"How? Well, the supposition is that she took an overdose of sleeping tablets. It seems she was in the habit of taking them. But they won't know definitely until after the autopsy. She didn't come down for breakfast, nothing unusual about that. Edward wouldn't let them disturb her even when Lana's absence was discovered and Poole didn't insist on it as he intended going back to the house later. But just before Edward came over here, he told Carrie she'd better take her up some coffee. She was dead when Carrie went to her room."

"She didn't say anything about Taylor and The Silver Slipper in her note, did she? But that couldn't have been Fay with him—that girl had yellow hair."

"She didn't mention Taylor. But here's something I didn't tell you Dorinda. In that note, Fay said she wore a yellow wig the day she came back from Monterey. She was afraid someone might see her and recognize her. She must have left the car hidden along some side road and walked to the house. She said we'd find the wig hidden in an old trunk up in the attic."

"A yellow wig!" Dorinda shivered. "Cleve, she must have followed me that day I went up there. If I'd tried to open the trunk—"

"She'd have stopped you some way, I expect." Cleve's voice was determinedly matter-of-fact. "Your intuition was certainly hitting on all six cylinders that time."

Cleve's wish to talk to Poole was soon gratified. The sheriff telephoned soon after lunch.

"He wants to have a sort of informal session tonight with everyone concerned over at Thorndyke House at eight o'clock," Cleve told Dorinda. "It has to be there because it seems he wants that attorney, Morrow, present and he isn't well enough to go out just yet."

Dorinda sighed. "I hate to go back there. But it would be silly to be frightened now. And you'll be with me."

He smiled down at her. "Just try to get away from me, gal. Poole asked me to come down to the sheriff's office about five o'clock but I'll be back in plenty of time for dinner and to take you over to the session. You and Mother can get better acquainted while I'm gone."

At six o'clock Carol telephoned. "Oh, Dorinda, it's good to hear your voice. Like a breath of fresh air." Carol sounded as if she had been crying. "This has been such a horrible day. First, Lana Thorndyke disappearing and then Miss Thorndyke—I still can't make myself believe she killed herself. It doesn't seem—possible."

"I know, Carol. The whole thing's like a bad dream."

"They told you about the note she left, of course. I keep telling myself that it's better this way. I mean, for her to go as she did. At least, Dorinda, you're safe now." The sound of her sighing breath came over the wire. "I can't be thankful enough about last night."

"I know, Carol," Dorinda said again. "I'm terribly grateful for what you did for me. If you hadn't taken me away—" She stopped, unable to go on.

"I hate thinking about it," Carol declared. "Let's try to forget it." She forced a note of cheerfulness into her voice. "Listen, dear, this is what I telephoned about. You know about the get-together tonight to clean up the odds and ends. I was wondering if you wouldn't come early and we'd have a talk. Edward's gone, Morrow's still sticking to his room, so there won't be any formal dinner. Your Aunt Harriet's there, of course, but I imagine she'll have something in her room. You and I could fix us up a couple of trays and sort of hash things over together. I'll come over after you."

"Oh, Carol, I hate coming over there—"

"Why, you'll be coming here anyway." she sounded surprised. "But it's all right, of course, if you don't want to. I only thought—I'm so darned lonesome. But I'll see you later when they all come."

Carol Builds Up Fay's Potential Complicity

"I'm sorry, of course I'll come," she promised impetuously. "I do want to see you. It's just that I hoped I'd never have to go back to that house again. But, as you say, I'm coming there anyway a little later. And being with you, I'll forget about the house."

When she told Cleve's mother of her plan, Mrs. Adams looked troubled. "I don't like your going away, child. Of course, it's all right for you to have dinner with your friend but I wish you'd asked her to come here instead."

"I imagine she wouldn't want to leave Mr. Morrow too long," Dorinda explained. "But it's all right, Mrs. Adams. I don't know how much Cleve has told you but the danger's over now. There's no reason why I shouldn't go."

Carol drove in promptly at six-thirty. She was hatless and the wind had ruffled her black hair into little curls about her forehead. She looked extremely pretty, Dorinda thought, her soft olive face flushed, her dark eyes bright as diamonds.

The last streaks of rose were fading above the distant blue of the hills. Dusk was beginning to gather as Dorinda climbed into the black roadster.

"Oh, Dorinda, I'm so glad to see you. You don't know what it's been like over there. Greer quit this morning—he lives in Trentville so the sheriff made no objection to his leaving. Carrie goes around looking like a ghost, and your Aunt Harriet, honestly, she gives me the jitters. She creeps around. This morning when she found her daughter was gone, she made a terrific fuss but after she talked to the sheriff she quieted down. She's been all over the place this afternoon. You think she's nowhere near and you look up and there she is. She's positively uncanny. Really, Dorinda, I felt like I'd scream if I couldn't talk to someone."

Dorinda laid her hand over Carol's on the wheel. "I can imagine. It must be ghastly."

"Ghastly is the word." Carol's shiver reflected itself in the movement of the car. "I've been wondering all day—do you suppose that was Fay and Lana Thorndyke whispering in the hall last night? Of course, it must have been."

She brooded silently for a moment, then went on. "They've taken her away, of course, but it seems as if she were still in the house. I keep expecting to hear her voice every time I turn around. I didn't like Miss Thorndyke. Sometimes I wonder if anyone did. But I wouldn't have wished her dead.

"I can picture her at the typewriter, typing out that last note. I bet she was as calm and perfect as she always was. She'd get up, take—whatever she took—get into bed and close her eyes without even an accelerated heart beat."

"Don't, Carol." Dorinda begged faintly.

Fishing Tackle Is Main Street's Big Business as Season Opens

On any warm afternoon in May millions of home towners will be walking along Main Streets of the thousands of small communities across the nation. They'll be walking slowly, glancing in store windows as they pass. And suddenly they'll stop and stare. A dreamy, faraway look will come into the eyes of some; others will mirror excitement.

Ninety-nine chances out of each hundred, those home towners who stopped so suddenly will have caught the glimpse of a display of sporting equipment ranging from fancy rods and reels to bamboo poles in the local sporting goods or hardware store window.

For May is "Let's Go Fishing Month," and the fishing fever rises to the boiling point in neophyte and expert. The most popular sport in America, fishing attracts young and old alike.

Americans, who nearly go wild over basketball, football and baseball, go completely overboard for fishing. From the oldest to the youngest, there's a hypnotic fascination about rods, reels, lines and lures that they can not resist. Americans spend millions for fishing equipment and it's the wise Main Street merchant that displays it prominently and attractively.

The amazing thing about fishing is the attraction it holds for millions of children. It might be just a cane pole, a hook, a line, and sinker they have for equipment, but it spells adventure and thrills.

In this connection, many towns in the country have encouraged fishing during recent years as one of the ways to curb juvenile delinquency. Many local Kiwanis and Rotary clubs have picked up the idea of Better Fishing Inc., a national organization with headquarters in Chicago, dedicated to introducing boys and girls to the fun and thrills of the angler's art, and sponsor Better Fishing Rodeos later in the summer.

The Rodeos, one day affairs, are preceded each year with weeks of fishing fiestas, which are a warm-up period for the national celebration, when youngsters are taken on organized fishing trips by parents and civic leaders who believe in teaching children the art and benefits of good sportsmanship while they are most susceptible to learning.

On the big day, National Boys and Girls Better Fishing Day, moppets sporting equipment ranging from rods and reels to plain bamboo poles troop to local lakes, ponds, and streams to compete for the national "Kings," and "Queens," titles and collect the BFI and local merchant donated prizes that go with victory.

Any boy or girl can compete if he or she is under the legal fishing license age of 16. Ages usually run from a toddling four years to the limit. Each contestant is allowed any legal sports fishing tackle, but may use only one hook and line, and must do his or her angling from the shore—no boats allowed. A rule which is probably a boon to the youngsters who like to do things themselves, but puts quite a strain on excited parents, is the one which limits landing assistance to the realm of verbal comments. It takes a strong-willed father or mother to control the urge to "lend a hand" when the offspring snags a fighting fish.

To the boys and girls who successfully land the heaviest fish in species from sunfish to the salt water variety go national titles, and angling outfits. It is seldom that any contestant leaves the fishing grounds emptyhanded. Local merchants and service clubs seem to have a way of digging up prizes for all.

And while all these activities are being planned for the children, it is becoming a rare community indeed that is not sponsoring fishing contests for the grownups of the community during the summer. In many communities local merchants, in cooperation with local publications, sponsor monthly contests with prizes for the biggest catch. In other localities the contests are conducted on a fishing season basis.

The idea of fishing as a sport to be sponsored on the local level is finding increased popularity because it fosters health and productive activity linked with enjoyment. It is finding increasing popularity also as a means of bringing parent and children together in an atmosphere of clean, uninhibited fun.

Although some hard-shelled veterans of the rod and reel may scoff at the benefits or even the sanity of bringing a fishing pole and a young lady together, the BFI refutes any doubts they might profess. The girls have more than held their own with the males.

Some fishing veterans will tell you it is a good idea indeed. For instance, if the husband arrives home loaded down with new fishing tackle instead of the fur coat she expected, the wife will understand because she too enjoys the sport and is probably a devoted angler herself. Instead of packing for the return trip to mother, she will be well satisfied with the purchase of a fishing outfit. At least that's the theory.

CROPLAND CONSERVATION

Misuse of Cropland Endangers Nation's Future Food Production

American civilization will reach a disastrous turning-point within 20 years unless "immediate and heroic measures" are taken to save its remaining cropland and to guarantee a continuing food supply for its growing population, the president of the American Horticultural Council warned recently in an address at the American Chemical Society's 119th national meeting.

Already, erosion and misuse have robbed the nation of 100 million acres of cropland out of the 560 million acres acquired by the early settlers, Dr. Wendell H. Camp, curator of experimental botany and Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, declared. If adequate steps are not taken immediately, he asserted, another 100 million acres will have been discarded by 1960.

Yet the population "now exceeds 150 million and is rising at the rate of 2,200,000 a year," Dr. Camp pointed out. Since nutritionists estimate that it takes two and a half acres of cropland to provide a properly balanced diet for a single person, the United States seems destined to arrive at the critical point at which it has just enough cropland "in the next fifteen or twenty years. Being the best fed, best clothed and most adequately housed people in the world, we somehow have the feeling that nothing can happen to change the situation."

"Actually, we are potentially very close to the brink of disaster, and it is very likely that our actions in the next decade will decide whether America is to continue strong and able, or whether it will start down that long trail from which no people—no civilization—has ever returned."

The world at large is in even worse shape than the United States, for there are only about four billion acres of land available for a total population of more than two billion—or slightly less than two acres per capita. This means that a considerable portion of the earth's population already is undernourished, and this as much as anything probably is at the bottom of the world's current unrest.

Plant breeding, reforestation, and improved utilization of soil and fertilizers were among the methods by which Dr. Camp proposed to meet the imminent challenge to America's economy.

New hybrid varieties of corn which have increased production by 25 per cent, and new species of grass which have raised the forage yield by more than 100 per cent were cited by the speaker, who said tree breeders also have developed hybrids promising quality lumber in one-third to one-half the usual time.

These more efficient plants, however, impose new demands on the grower, who must supply them with enough mineral nutrients through the more efficient use of fertilizers. Proper administration of miners may make it possible to restore to production some of the acreage which has been despoiled

Yeast, Seaweed May Feed Civilization

Even if all the available measures for protecting cropland, increasing yields, reforestation and the like are taken, the world's population seems likely to continue to increase to the point where ultimately it cannot be fed by crops of the type used today, Dr. Camp believes. When that time comes the yeast plant and the seaweed will hold man's best hope for survival for they can provide the basic food—protein from yeast and fats and starches from algae.

"At present, these vat-cultured carbohydrates, fats and proteins may not be easily translatable into our notions of bread and butter, ham and eggs, or steak and potatoes, but they are basic food substances, and because of them I do not as yet see ahead on any distant horizon the darkening shadow of Malthusian twilight and the stagnation and end of the race," Dr. Camp said.

When only a few drops of lemon juice are needed, puncture the skin of the lemon with a fork and gently squeeze out the amount of juice needed. This eliminates the waste that occurs when a lemon is cut, as it keeps the remaining lemon juice fresh.

When eggs are scarce, a medium-sized grated raw potato may be substituted for the egg usually used in a meat loaf. The potato will bind the mixture together just as the egg does.

Leftover vegetables can be perked up if they're served with browned butter to which a few bread crumbs have been added.

SPRAY TO KILL APHIDS

One ounce makes 6 gallons of spray. Kills aphids and similar sucking insects by contact and fumes. Spares friendly insects. Leaves no harmful residue. Can be mixed with other standard sprays. Proved dependable by 39 years of use on fruits, vegetables and flowers.

HADACOL BRINGS RELIEF TO FOLKS SUFFERING STOMACH DISTRESS

Indigestion, Gas, Heartburn, Bloating When Due To Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin Deficiencies

Guy H. Housley, 641 14th St., San Diego, Calif.: "I am 40 years of age and have had a nervous stomach condition for quite some time. Couldn't eat hardly anything. Back in my home town, I bought a bottle of HADACOL and before the first bottle was gone, I could tell a difference. Then I came to San Diego and couldn't get it here. I sent back to Atlanta for it. Now, thank God, they have it on the market here and I have a supply in my house. Not only that, but I'm telling all my friends what HADACOL has done for me. I sleep well, eat anything I can get and feel wonderful. I could go on and on praising HADACOL, it's done so much for me."

Mrs. Minnie McCormick, Rt. 1, Wedowee, Ala.: "I am glad to tell what HADACOL has done for me. After taking one bottle of HADACOL, I went to work in the field, chopping cotton, doing all my housework, milking, washing and ironing. I have taken several bottles of HADACOL now. I can't ever praise HADACOL enough to cover all it has done for me when I had no appetite at all. Now I eat anything and have a good appetite and nothing bothers me. I never do without HADACOL now. My friends noticed my change, and now they are also HADACOL users, too. My 77-year-old daddy uses HADACOL. I want to say thanks to HADACOL and to the makers of HADACOL."

Here Is Wonderful News For You Folks Who Suffer From Stomach disturbances (indigestion, gas, heartburn, "sour risings" after meals) because your system lacks Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron, important elements contained in HADACOL.

With today's great HADACOL you can actually relieve the cause of such stomach disturbances caused by these deficiencies. A marked improvement is often noticed within a few days' time. And continued use of HADACOL not only gives continuous relief, but helps prevent such distress from coming back. That's the kind of product you want—the kind you should buy—the kind you should start taking now.

Anyone would be very foolish indeed to be satisfied with symptomatic relief, when HADACOL makes it possible to relieve the cause of this stomach distress due to such deficiencies. Know the joy of eating the foods you like without suffering gas pains, heartburn and indigestion afterward!

How HADACOL Works

HADACOL not only supplies weak, run-down, deficient systems with extra quantities of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin but also beneficial amounts of Calcium and Phosphorus—elements so necessary to help maintain good health.

And these Vitamins and Minerals come in special liquid form so that they can be easily and quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood—ready to go right to work at once. HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these elements throughout your body.

Start taking HADACOL at once. HADACOL costs only a small amount a day. Trial size bottle, $1.25. Large family economy size, $3.50. Sold on a strict money-back guarantee. If your dealer does not sell HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana.

Mrs. W. H. Morton, Route 1, Murfreesboro, Tenn.: "HADACOL has helped me so much I feel I have to write about it. Before I started taking HADACOL, I had a very nervous stomach and couldn't eat. So I heard about HADACOL. I got a bottle to try and began to feel better and could eat anything I wanted to. I feel so much better now. I am always telling my friends how HADACOL has helped me. And I just can't think of enough to say about HADACOL and what it has done for me. I am 28 years old and a steady user of HADACOL. I have been taking HADACOL for about a year."

Mrs. John A. Feight, Jr., of Route 1, Bedford, Pennsylvania: "Anything I ate made my stomach ache and churn all night. My food never seemed to get digested and therefore I would wake frequently in the night with pains. I would be nervous and think over the day's nerve-racking experiences. Every little thing irritated me. I couldn't stand children around me. They made me nervous. I would holler at my two-year-old daughter, Vickie, for nothing at all. Since taking HADACOL all my nausea and nervousness have passed away. All I can say for HADACOL is that it's made me see that this is a beautiful world after all. I'm 20 years old and am a housewife. I really do feel as great as I look in the photograph."

WOULD YOU GO FOR A 1939 DOLLAR?

A dollar's a dollar — whether it's a 1939 dollar or a 1951 dollar -- same design, same paper, same ink.

What you can BUY with that dollar is something else again. For instance, the dollar that was worth 100 pennies in 1939 is worth only 48c today when you buy your groceries.

But, when you buy ELECTRICITY, your dollar is worth ten cents MORE than it was in 1939! Twelve years ago, your dollar bought a dollar's worth of electricity — today it buys $1.10* worth of electricity!

Is there anything else in your family budget that costs less today than it did in 1939?

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

Squirrel, transformer pole, short circuit, no lights on Wiley farm near Ortonville, no squirrel. . . As Mr. and Mrs. S. Reishus started to Granite Falls church a rabbit hustled from under the car; soon the car was sputtering and died; rabbit hairs indicated that bunny had chewed insulation from most of the electrical system. . . Tyler carpenters adopted a family of six baby squirrels and their mother, uncovered in remodeling the golf club. . . . Mrs. Regina Sauser and son reported a herd of seven deer near Farmington; deer circles are probably agog with reports of flying Sausers.

Register Now For Bible School

Plans are under way to have vacation Bible school again this summer. Do you know that it takes more than 10 months of Sunday School or week day school to equal two weeks at vacation Bible School? If you would like to have your children attend, register them now with either Mrs. Holst or Mrs. Louis Sagstuen. We do not know yet which weeks in June we will be in session or who our teacher will be Mr. Brandt is discussing it with some of the men from the seminary and we hope to have a student as our teacher.

Relatives and friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Engen on Sunday to honor them on the occasion of their 25th wedding anniversary.

Farm Sale of Seeds

Seed of farm grain legumes, grasses and other agricultural seed sold by farmers to other farmers is required to be cleaned tested and labeled. Farmers should not buy unlabeled seed from their neighbors. Besides being illegal this practice often results in serious spread of very harmful weeds and infestations of many clean farms. Leafy spurge, field bindweed, thistles, dodder, catch fly, Frenchweed and all other weeds are spread this way. Few farmers know what weeds are on their neighbors farm and most farmers do not even know what they have themselves. Do not buy unlabeled seed from farmers or from dealers.

WOMEN'S CAMP AND 4-H CLUB WEEK DATES SET FOR NORTHWEST SCHOOL

The dates for the 26th annual Women's Camp at the Northwest School of Agriculture at Crookston have been set for June 11 - 14.

Miss Retta Bede, camp leader, announces that a program of unusual interest to homemakers has been planned. Room reservations are now being received for the camp.

A planning conference for the annual 4-H Club Week to be held at the Northwest School, Crookston, was held recently. Superintendent T. M. McCall announced the dates of June 18 - 23 as the week for the 4-H club camps. Osgood Magnusson of St. Paul, district 4-H club supervisor and camp leader, presided at the planning conference session. It was agreed that the south group of counties would meet June 18-19-20, and the north county group would meet June 21-22-23. The northern group of counties includes Clearwater, Red Lake, Pennington, Marshall, Kittson, Roseau and Lake of the Woods.

Conference delegates present at the meeting included Delores Andol, Roseau; Sylvian Lorvig, Thief River Falls; Florence Olson, Crookston; John Hulteen, Bagley; Mrs. Verna Erickson, Detroit Lakes, all county 4-H club agents: and Osgood Magnusson and N. C. Mindrum, state 4-H club leaders of St. Paul; County Agents Frank Forbes, Warren; Harold Rosendahl, Ada; and Superintendent T. M. McCall and E. N. Reiersgord of the Northwest School staff.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Fay Thorndyke, cousin of Edward Thorndyke and who has hoped to marry him, is found dead, ostensibly from an overdose of sleeping pills, and with a suicide note beside her. Here is the fourth death which has occurred in connection with Stella Moore's masquerading as Dorinda LaCroix, deceased, in order to deceive Dorinda's grandmother, old Mrs. Thorndyke. Fay's note contained a "confession" implicating her in the case and telling of how it was she who were the "yellow wig" which had figured so prominently in the clues. Nurse Carol speculates upon the potential complicity of Fay in all that has happened and reviews Fay's activities since the mystery began to take shape.

CHAPTER XX

"Well, you can't imagine her getting excited, can you? You know she hated both of us with that cold deadly hate of hers. She had no use for any woman who was young and even reasonably good looking. She was jealous even of your uncle's affection for you. I used to think that queer but now—"

She turned her head quickly and looked into Dorinda's face. "I want to ask you something. We are friends, aren't we? You won't mind?"

"Why, of course, we're friends. What is it, Carol?"

"Maybe I'm wrong, but you're not really Dorinda LaCroix, are you?"

Dorinda caught her breath. The question was the last one she had expected. "No. No, Carol, I'm not. How did you know?"

"Well, I remembered what old Mrs. Thorndyke said the day she died. I began to suspect. And then there were lots of little things. But I wasn't sure." She nodded as if in satisfaction that her suspicion was confirmed, then added quickly, "You needn't tell me about it. I know whatever you've done has been for a good reason."

"I'm glad you know. I don't like carrying around a secret like that by myself. Everyone will know soon. But I don't want to talk about it yet. I promised to let Uncle Edward tell whatever is necessary."

"Why, Dorinda!" Carol's voice rose in amazement. "Do you mean to say Cleve Adams doesn't know?"

"I've kept my promise," Dorinda said briefly. "It—it will be hard telling him."

"Don't worry, dear. It won't make any difference." But there was an undertone of doubt in Carol's words. "Let's forget it, shall we?"

Her hand reached out suddenly and switched on the car lights. "Good Heavens! I'd forgotten to turn them on. If I hadn't seen that motorcycle headlight, I'd have gone all the way home in the dark."

Carol Pours Cocktail For Dorinda to Drink

A few minutes later the motorcycle passed them, but as they neared Thorndyke House they saw it had stopped at the roadside and the cyclist was bending over the machine, tinkering with the engine. They could hear a muttered stream of profanity as they passed him.

The big house was dark as they turned in the open iron gates except for the fanlight above the front door which made a warm half-moon of light under the portico roof. Carol opened the door with her key and the two girls went into the empty entrance hall.

It was more cheerful in the shining whiteness of the kitchen. Carrie was nowhere in sight but the big room was meticulously neat, the red and white curtains crisp and clean, the huge black stove polished and bare.

Carol threw her coat over the back of a painted chair. "Suppose we start out with a cocktail," she proposed. "I don't often indulge and I know you don't. But I think we both need a lift. I know where Greer kept a bottle of Mr. Thorndyke's best hidden."

"We'll do this up in style." Carol's low spirits seemed to be evaporating. "Oh, bother, that bottle of maraschino cherries is just out of my reach. Get it for me, will you, Dorinda? You're about half an inch taller than I."

Dorinda obediently reached for the cherries and then at Carol's request, brought a small bowl of ice cubes from the refrigerator. Carol put ice in the glasses and poured the whisky in.

"There you are!" the nurse said triumphantly. "I'll bet you never drank a better cocktail."

She set a glass down in front of Dorinda and lifted her own. The ceiling light pouring down through the brownish liquor turned it to sparkling gold. A reflected spot of color made a yellow splotch low on the white wall.

"Here's to us," Carol chanted. "And better days ahead!"

Dorinda lifted her glass.

"Put that down!" a voice said.

Poole was in the kitchen, apparently appearing from nowhere. His hand was firm on Carol's shoulder. "Mrs. Thorndyke." The unexpected words came with the force of a blow. "You're under arrest for the murder of Anne Delahay."

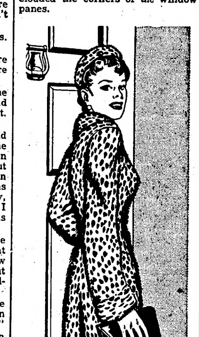
Hawley was in the kitchen. Another man, a stranger. Cleve was there, coming toward Dorinda. But her eyes saw nothing except the black fury of Carol's face. She backed away, not wanting to look. She was against the swinging door, pushing it open. Above her, on the staircase, a voice spoke her name. As if the utterance of the word broke the spell, she whirled around, looked up into Harriet's face.

A key grated in the lock of the front door. It swung back. Lana, a small elegant figure of triumph, stood there. Her coral-tipped fingers clutched the arm of the man who stood beside her. She saw Harriet on the stairs, she saw Dorinda at the entrance to the kitchen.

"I'm back!" she cried, her voice high and exultant. "And this is my husband, Rodney Van Sillar."

Poole Outlines Way Carol Worked Schemes

They were gathered in his office, Dorinda, Cleve, the sheriff's deputy. Outside, a high fog hid the sun, a raw wind swept in from the gray sea. Hawley had touched a match to the gas heater and the small, square room, hazy with cigarette smoke, was hot and stuffy. Steam clouded the corners of the window panes.



Lana, a small, elegant figure of triumph, stood there.

"We weren't getting anywhere with Taylor's murder. But, after all, he was from Los Angeles. The girl who was with him that night, the girl nobody knew, might have been an outsider. She hadn't been seen anywhere except in The Silver Slipper. She might have come from Los Angeles, from San Francisco, anywhere.

"But when Anne Delahay was killed, I couldn't accept that accidental death idea. I've told you why. And the yellow-haired girl bobs up again. That was too much. It didn't take brains to figure these two deaths, both arranged to look like accidents, were connected.

"Why? There wasn't any link between those two people. But Taylor had claimed acquaintance with you, Miss LaCroix, shortly before he was put out of the way; Anne, dressed in your bathing suit, sitting in the place you often sat, was killed. As soon as I found you couldn't have been the yellow-head yourself, I knew you were meant to be the victim. Especially since no one had any motive to dispose of Anne. She hadn't any enemies, she hadn't any money, she hadn't even a boy friend. Practically everyone in town knew everything there was to know about her.

"But you were different. You had a background of mystery. And Mr. Edward Thorndyke admitted to me you were to inherit old Mrs. Thorndyke's money. He, of course, was the logical suspect. But he had an alibi for both times under inquiry. I don't think it ever occurred to him we'd really run down his alibi for the day of Anne Delahay's murder. He was Edward Thorndyke, the lord of the manor, so to speak. His word should be enough. But we did run it down, forgetting the blonde girl for the moment, and found it airtight. Too many people had seen and spoken to both him and Miss Fay Thorndyke to admit any possibility of collusion. He didn't know that though when he lied so glibly about how she'd left him in Monterery."

"Yes, she had an alibi. The station master had seen her leave on the eleven-thirty train for Los Angeles. And her friend in Los Angeles claimed to have met her when the train got in about two o'clock. According to her, they'd spent the rest of the day together. They'd shopped, taken in a picture show. The manager of the Harvard Apartments remembered they'd come in together that night. But Carol's whereabouts that afternoon was confirmed by only a single person and that one a supposed friend.

"That didn't prove much, but then Harriet Thorndyke came down to see me the morning after Carol came home. She said that one night while she was watching for Lana to come home, she saw Edward Thorndyke and Carol come in together. Of course, as I pointed out to her, they might have both been out and simply happened to come home at the same time, especially since she admitted she didn't see any love making or anything of the sort. But she insisted she knew they'd been together, that there was a sort of intimacy impossible to describe between them. And, after I'd talked to the servants, it didn't take me long to come around to her way of thinking.

"Carrie and Greer were both of the opinion that Mr. Edward, as they called him, didn't like the nurse. Their only reason for thinking so was that he didn't pay any attention to her. For them, knowing the gentleman's weakness, that was enough. They knew Mrs. Thorndyke, though she'd often alleged she liked young and good-looking people around her, had never hired anyone but plain and middle-aged women and they knew why.

"And here was a young and extremely pretty woman, bound to be agreeable to the master of the house and Mr. Thorndyke ignored her. There had to be a reason for that. It was possible he didn't ignore her because he disliked her—it could have been that he liked her too much and didn't want anyone to know about it.

Carol Really Didn't Plan Murder at First

"Just two apparently unimportant things. But I didn't forget them. I'd heard, and Harriet confirmed it, that this same nurse had been Mrs. Thorndyke's special nurse in the hospital the year before. I began to wonder if there really was something between those two. Of course, it was common knowledge that he was engaged to the beauteous Fay. But that engagement had been going on for years and—what was it he said to you about tarnished romance, Cleve?"

Cleve grinned without answering and Poole went on. "Anyway, I went to Los Angeles. I talked to some of the nurses who had been at the hospital at the time old Mrs. Thorndyke had been there. It didn't take long to find out that there had been a love affair of no mean proportions between our Edward and Carol. A hospital is like a small town. Everyone knows everyone else's business. Apparently the only one in the place at the time who had no inkling of what was happening was the old lady herself. And she was too sick to pay much attention to anything.

"I examined the marriage license records in Los Angeles and found what I was looking for. I didn't think they could have gone far—Carol was pretty closely tied to her patient. Going to Arizona or Mexico would have presented difficulties and the three-day interval between application and marriage in California would have necessitated two trips if they'd chosen some other place in the state. They didn't want the fact that they were married generally known but there wasn't the need for extreme secrecy that there was afterward.

"Carol wasn't planning murder yet. In fact, she didn't know then that Edward wasn't a rich man in his own right or that he wouldn't inherit his mother's fortune as a matter of course. She was simply seizing an opportunity to make what she considered a wealthy marriage.

"I have learned since that it was Mr. Thorndyke who insisted upon secrecy in the beginning and he had no intention of maintaining that secrecy for more than a few weeks. He simply wanted to wait for favorable opportunity to break the news to his mother. He knew she didn't want him to marry Fay; he knew she was very fond of Carol. Carol had given him glamorous accounts of her past and her family which bore little semblance to the truth, and he was confident that he could win his mother's approval. He even believed it would be an additional argument in persuading Mrs. Thorndyke to leave him a portion of the money destined for her granddaughter.

"But when Carol learned that her husband's future was dependent upon his mother's good will, it was she who persuaded him it would be unwise to allow the marriage to become known. She knew Mrs. Thorndyke well enough to be aware of her regard for family and background; she knew, too, that her own past and beginnings wouldn't stand any kind of investigation.

"Naturally, I didn't know all this at the time, but I had found the records of the marriage, and it seemed to me I had a motive all wrapped up. All that remained was to interview Miss Hastings, Carol's friend. She held out for a while but finally, when she found out what I already knew and that she might be held as an accessory after the fact in a murder case, she cracked.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Chiggers on the lawn and bushes can be destroyed by the liberal use of sulphur, applied with a dust gun. On lawns, of course, the chiggers will disappear if the grass is kept cut.

It is a good plan to fill cheesecloth bags with pieces of charcoal and hang them in the damp cellar or basement. These will prove effective in removing the dampness from the air. The bags should be emptied occasionally and the charcoal dried and used again.

Vegetables that are a little old can be made more tender if a small amount of baking soda is added to the water used for boiling.

Absorbent cotton is a perfect filterer for muddy water. The cotton should not be used after it has become dirty.

Paraffin that is left over, after putting on jelly, can be removed from the container by filling the pan with boiling water and allowing to cool. The paraffin will float on the surface of the water and will be easy to remove.

Water stains on furniture can sometimes be removed by use of a tablespoonful of powdered pumice mixed with enough linseed oil to make a thin paste. Rub on the spots until they disappear; then wipe off with a cloth dampened in polish.

A delicious dessert can be prepared with baked sliced bananas, spread with honey and a few chopped nuts. Serve cold or hot. A recommended addition to this is lemon or orange sauce.

When paring quinces or other hard fruits or vegetables, it is a wise practice to protect the inside of the thumb and forefinger with pieces of adhesive tape.

Flies and other insects can be kept away from freshly-painted surfaces by mixing a little bay oil (laurel oil) with the oil paint. Or, place a receptacle containing this oil in the vicinity of the painted objects. The pungent odor will keep off the flies.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!
Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.
But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Housework Easy Without Nagging Backache

When kidney function slows down, many folks complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Don't suffer longer with these discomforts if reduced kidney function is getting you down—due to such common causes as stress and strain, over-exertion or exposure to cold. Minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or wrong diet may cause getting up nights or frequent passages.
Don't neglect your kidneys if these conditions bother you. Try Doan's Pills—a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While often otherwise caused, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief from these discomforts—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

Restaurants Have Important Role in Home Town Economy

Restaurants are so much a part of the daily American scene that people in the home towns more or less take them for granted. But all during May, which is "Restaurant Hospitality Month", local restaurateurs have an opportunity to make the home folks sit up and take due note of the role the restaurant industry and the men and women who are a part of it play in the Main Street and national economy and well being.

"Eat Out Today—It's Convenient! It's Fun!" is the slogan that has been chosen to set the theme of the month. People on Main Street will see it displayed on front doors and windows, on mirrors and counters in their favorite restaurants throughout the nation.

A MAIN STREET FEATURE

Many local and state restaurant associations, perhaps the restaurateurs just up the street, have planned programs by which they will bring to your attention the services they offer. Some will sponsor cooperative newspaper or radio advertising, while others plan luncheons, parades, parties, or similar festivities to honor their outstanding civic leaders, underprivileged children, or other citizens in the public limelight.

One of the amazing things about the restaurant business is that the average home-towner does not realize what an important part the restaurant on Main Street plays in his community.

In an indirect manner he is the official host of your town. That is where the tourist stops to be fed, to ask a few questions, and to relax. And on whether or not he gets a good meal depends the length of time he will spend in your community, and possibly the amount of money he will leave behind. A good restaurant has caused more motorists to drive out of their way than possibly any other industry in the country today.

But aside from the outside trade a good restaurant brings into your own community, just what is the economical relation of the restaurants in your home town upon the population?

Count them up. Maybe there's only one restaurant in your town—maybe four. How many people do they employ? How much food do they buy? How much do they pay in taxes? Total them up and you have a good part of your home town retail business.

On the national level, 25 per cent of all the food consumed in this country is consumed in public eating establishments. All kinds and types of meals and ways of serving them have been devised to suit the convenience, tastes, pocketbooks and nationalities of the people who make up America. Twenty years ago only 18 per cent of the food was consumed outside the home.

Today the public feeding industry has become the third largest retail industry in America, doing an annual volume of $10 billion a year. Over 2 million people are employed in the public feeding industry. In retail trades, eating places rank third in the number of persons gainfully employed throughout the year with no seasonal slump. One out of every six workers in retail trades is employed in the public eating industry.

It has been estimated that 7.1 per cent of the consumer's disposable income for food and beverages in 1950 was outside the home. This includes any establishment serving food to the public for a consideration: lunchrooms, cafeterias, table service, hotel dining rooms, fountains, variety store counters, department store operations, industrial feeding operations, school lunchrooms, drive-ins, and inflight food service.

Long-trend changes in the consumption habits of the public that have taken place since World War II and the increase in travel are cited as the reason for this great increase in away-from-home eating.

* * *

National and Inter-American Music Week (May 6-13) will be observed this year in more than 3,000 cities, home towns and small communities. For the 28th annual observance the basic aims of Music Week continue, as they have been from the beginning: to advance the love of music and impress upon the consciousness of the people its value in modern life; to increase performance of music by groups and individuals; to multiply opportunities for young talent and widen acquaintance with good music by American composers.

Perhaps your home town has planned special musical programs. If not, it is not too late to arrange a program that will bring to the attention of your community the value of music.

Church and church-school participation has been increasing in recent years in many small towns. Sermons on music and special programs by organists and choirs are being supplemented by concerts and hymn singings designed to revitalize the entire musical side of the church service. Inter-church and inter-denominational events are using music to strengthen the cooperative as well as the religious spirit.

Youth groups of both boys and girls have been coming to the fore in Music Week with demonstrations of what they are doing in music. Many adult groups—women's clubs, parent-teacher associations and rural groups, like the Grange, Four-H and Homemakers Clubs, are taking advantage of the observance effectively to climax their season's musical activities and sometimes to arrange public programs."

Men's luncheon clubs, service clubs, and civic organizations are not only taking part more prominently, with music for their own members, but are furthering movements for the general musical development on the local level.

Schools and clubs have a unique opportunity in Music Week to focus attention on the musicians of the community, professional and amateur. In some communities observances will feature programs to bring out the contributions of local musicians toward making the town a better place in which to live.

From the inception of Music Week on a synchronized national basis in 1924 the schools have had a prominent role in the participation and have used the opportunity to make local communities more conscious of their increasingly effective work in music. The week gives school orchestras, bands and glee clubs an opportunity to appear before service clubs and civic organizations to demonstrate their achievements.

Thousands of small towns across the nation find in Music Week the opportunity for self-expression that stresses their mutual interests and achievement. It is another means by which the people in small towns can create their own entertainment.

SPRING CLEANING

Modern Housewives Should Take Advantage of Cleaning 'Helpers'

Spring cleaning—that time is here again for thousands of small town housewives across the nation—more than ever brings a challenge to American women to keep things spotless clean and shining bright in spite of problems on the home front. It means taking good care of household furnishings to extend their period of use and thus eliminate costly repairs and replacements.

Perhaps the family dreads the announcement that it's house-cleaning time again, but this problem can be simplified if the job is well organized. By taking advantage of modern cleaning "helpers" the home town housewife can lighten household tasks.

It's a wise housewife who first checks the supply of household products on hand to see what must be obtained before cleaning starts. And a well-planned housecleaning schedule extended over a two or three week period and not crammed into a few days of exhausting work eliminates tearing up the house from top to bottom and also saves family tempers. One room completed at a time before going to the next will make every husband happy.

Why not prepare a spring housecleaning campaign like a general and first make a helpful list of basic housecleaning needs.

Wise Housewife Looks for Time Savers

Save time and steps by using a portable table on wheels or a market basket to carry all the cleaning and polishing bottles, cloths and water basin from room to room.

Fighting the clothes moth is a year-round effort but special attention with moth-fighting sprays is necessary at the change of seasons. Clean the closet before storing clothes, then spray the interior thoroughly with an insecticide.

Newer types of bottled furniture polish on the market today help extend the life of furniture and give a high gloss and wax protection without rubbing. Or try liquid cream wax for furniture and floors which cleans and waxes at the same time. Cream wax can be used on radiators, leather and plastic upholstery and Venetian blinds to preserve them.

Scientists Say There Is No Such Thing As an Average Lifetime

The belief of Biblical times that "three score and ten" is an exceptionally long span of life is being revised by modern scientists. Today, the average span of man's life in advanced nations is approximately 65.5 years, and it is gradually rising.

Mankind has been able to more than triple his life span since primitive times. Eighteen was considered an old age in the days of the caveman. The upper class Roman was lucky if he lived beyond 22. In 1850 the average life span on this continent was 41 years. Now, it has advanced to almost 66 years.

Research workers are now suggesting that the human life span could be lengthened to 120 years within a decade by increasing our "Know-how" in nutrition, medicine, chemistry and other factors entering into a good living standard.

A new national foundation for anti-aging research has been established in the United States, with the aim of obtaining at least $4,000,000 (a fraction of the cost of making one atom bomb) for research in the new science of gerontotherapeutics (prevention of old age).

In recent years scientists have stated there is no such thing as a "natural lifetime." Dr. Henry S. Simms of Columbia university has observed that if the human body could retain throughout the years the ability it possesses at at 10 years of age to resist disease and repair breakdown, "man would have a life expectancy of 800 years and some individuals might survive 22,000 years."

When plastic table covers get too scratched or torn to be used for tables, they can be cut down to make good aprons, or sheets for wrapping refrigerator foods.

To remove excess fat from hot soup, wrap a piece of ice in a small piece of cheesecloth and run it over the top of the soup. The excess fat will congeal and collect on the cold surface of the cloth and is thus easily removed.

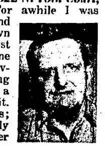
HADACOL BRINGS RELIEF TO FOLKS SUFFERING ACHES AND PAINS
When Due To Lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron In Their Systems!

Mrs. Homer Hanes, Route 1, Newport, Ohio: "I have been having pains for a time. I took three bottles of HADACOL and now my pains don't bother me. I sure feel good now. I could hardly do my housework before, but now I can get my work done good. I got a job at the American Pottery and really don't feel tired at the end of the day. I can sleep good at night now. Thanks a million for HADACOL. I wouldn't be without it."

Mrs. Lula Nelsoni, 1702 E. 63rd St., Los Angeles, Calif.: "I was run-down, couldn't sleep at night, had aches and pains and with seven children to care for I couldn't get my work done. After three bottles of HADACOL I felt so much better I could do more work than ever before. I've been taking HADACOL ever since and feel so good. I now give it to my children and it has helped them, too."

Hardy Holmes, 1020 Empire Street, Joplin, Missouri: "Before taking HADACOL I had pains and I would suffer with bloat after eating. My energy was low and I had a run-down feeling. After I started taking HADACOL I got almost immediate relief. I don't have my pains any more and now I can eat anything and even drink coffee without the discomfort of bloating. Thanks to HADACOL I am sleeping and resting better at night and feel better generally. This is worth gold. My wife also took HADACOL and got wonderful results."



Edward Jakubowski, 1622 N. 75th Court, Elmwood Park, Ill.: "For awhile I was bothered with aches and pains and felt run-down after a long cold that just seemed to hang on. One day one of the other drivers suggested I start taking HADACOL. So, I bought a bottle and started taking it. It has relieved my pains; they've almost completely disappeared, and no longer prevent me from sleeping well. This was three years ago when I took my first bottle of HADACOL. I still continue to take it and have recommended it to many of my friends."

WHY HADACOL GIVES SUCH WONDERFUL RESULTS

ACT NOW—HADACOL is not a quick-acting pill which gives symptomatic relief—HADACOL gives such remarkable results because it actually relieves the real cause of aches and pains when due to lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin in the system. And continued use of HADACOL not only helps give continuous, complete relief but also helps prevent such annoying pains from coming back. A big improvement is often noticed within a few days!

What HADACOL Does

This great product not only supplies weak, deficient systems with extra quantities of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin but also beneficial amounts of precious Calcium and Phosphorus—elements so vital to maintain good health and to help guard against such deficiency ailments.

Be Fair to Yourself

Start taking HADACOL today. If you have such a deficiency, don't keep dragging yourself around when relief is so inexpensive and near at hand—your neighborhood drugstore. Trial size bottle, only $1.25. Large family economy size, $3.50.

HADACOL comes in special liquid form so that it's quickly absorbed and assimilated by the blood. A big improvement is often noticed within a few days. Buy HADACOL today.

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. State whether you want the $3.50 family economy size or $1.25 trial size. Remember, money cheerfully refunded unless you are 100% satisfied.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

You've Got To Hand It To Sandy

Sandy Johnson's wife "Tiny" suddenly asks him at breakfast the other morning "Why don't you build me some bluebird houses?"

"What for?" asks Sandy. "Why for bluebirds, of course" says Tiny. "We always had 'em at home when I was a girl. May sound silly—but I sorta miss 'em."

Well, I know how busy Sandy's been lately and the thought of taking time out to build birdhouses could have made a lot of men blow their top. But not Sandy. He says, "No, Tiny. It doesn't sound silly. I think it's a wonderful idea—we're going to have bluebirds—and I'm starting on some birdhouses tonight."

From where I sit, we could do with more understanding people like Sandy—and Tiny, too. He respects her likings, and she respects his. He likes a temperate glass of beer now and then—and although Tiny sticks to coffee, whatever Sandy likes is O.K. with her. They live and let live—and that's why they live so happily.

Otter Tales

By ... Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

When I was a student at Fuse Box University, I was probably the laziest little kilowatt you ever saw, except for an electric eel that spent four years as a freshman. Every once in a while, old Professor Current (we called him A. C. for short) used to lecture me: "You'll have to change, Reddy. You'll get transformed so fast you won't know what happened, once you get a job."

The old Prof was right. These Otter Tail Power Company folks keep me so busy there's no time for loafin'. I just found out the other day that Otter Tail has increased its output of electricity 124% since 1945. That amounted to an all-time high of 477,221,000 kilowatt hours in 1950!

It's a good thing they built that big plant at Ortonville—even though it cost three and a half million dollars. It's been in operation since last November, but the big Open House for the public was held April 28 and 29. Gave lots of folks a chance to see why it's so expensive to make electricity.

Of course, the nice thing about it is this: The MORE electricity you generate, the cheaper it becomes. Your bill may be higher now than ten years ago, but folks are using MORE and MORE electricity every day—because they get so much more for their money.

For instance, in 1942, there were only 10,136 electric ranges in use in the Otter Tail system. By 1950, that figure had increased to 27,233. About 20,000 Otter Tail customers had refrigerators in 1942—last year there were 59,957!

PLENTY OF HOT WATER

Now, do you want to know what electric appliance showed the biggest increase? ELECTRIC WATER HEATERS! Only 2,977 of them in 1942—last year over 16,500. Of course, you can't blame folks for getting excited about electric water heaters. Having hot water on tap ALL the time—summer and winter—is sure dandy. And it's cheap, too.

Well, I see the latest thing is electric scissors. Eliminates a lot of "thumb" exhaustion, weighs only 15 ounces, can be used on any material. Pardon me, until next month, while I go cut up a couple yards of percale!

Climate of Jericho

Lying 800 feet and more below Mediterranean level, the garden acres of Jericho extend toward the Dead sea, lowest surface level on earth. In summer Jericho is torrid, and waves of heat make the desolate white marl hills seem to dance a witch's waltz. In winter, when Jerusalem lies frozen under a blanket of snow, Jericho, near by and far below, is a sunshine paradise.

"We Get Fair Treatment From LAND O' LAKES"
says BEN A. KNEBEL,
Pequot Lakes, Minn., dairyman

Meet Ben Knebel, an owner-patron of the Cooperative Creamery Association, Pequot Lakes, Minnesota. And let him tell you why he deals with LAND O' LAKES. "I've found LAND O' LAKES to be a cooperative that operates one hundred per cent for the farmer. They treat us fair and square every time.

"And what's more, LAND O' LAKES saves its farmer-owners a lot of money. Not only by helping provide a more stable market and higher average butterfat returns, but fair prices on top quality feeds and seeds and all kinds of farm equipment and supplies. And best of all, they're square shooters, always."

So take a tip from Ben Knebel. If you sell milk, sell through LAND O' LAKES, where every farmer gets the same square deal.

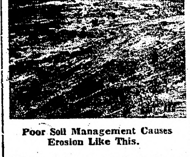
Blame for Erosion Rests on Poor Soil Management Methods

THE blame for soil erosion usually rests on poor soil management rather than on washing of the land declared Dr. L. D. Baver, formerly with the Ohio State Agronomy Department.

"When we ask the question, 'How serious is soil erosion?' he said, "we probably have phrased the query wrongly. A better question would be is 'How serious is poor soil management?' "

Poor soil management, he said, affects more people than soil erosion. It affects people on level lands as well as rolling and hilly areas. Good soil management on the rolling lands includes more than erosion control.

"Good soil management," he said, "is closely allied to good farm management. You do not put grass on a hillside just to control erosion or make the countryside look green. Grass is planted there to make feed for a cow that will produce milk that will help rear a better boy or girl."



Poor Soil Management Causes Erosion Like This.

He pointed out that good soil management can restore exhausted land to profitable crop production. He cited tests at the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station at Wooster, where six inches of surface soil was removed from impoverished land. By good soil management, the subsoil's fertility level was brought above the average for Ohio. At Raleigh, N. C., where he formerly was dean of the agricultural college, land that could produce only 10 bushels of corn per acre was changed into pasture. The soil was limed and fertilized with phosphate and potash. Now the legume-grass pasture yields digestible nutrients equivalent to 92 bushels of corn per acre.

Early Days of Football

About 75 years ago a group of Cornell university students asked their famous president, Andrew Dickson White, if they might be excused from classes to journey from Ithaca, N. Y. to Cleveland, O., to play football against a team from the University of Michigan. After due deliberation, President White replied, "I will not permit 30 men to travel 400 miles merely to agitate a bag of wind."

Need Fertile Soils For Health Building High Protein Foods

FARM soils must be kept fertile if we are to supply the protein foods needed for good growth, sound health and the creation of new life, declared the Middle West Improvement Committee, in citing a recent statement by Dr. W. A. Albrecht, head of the University of Missouri soils department.

"Foods high in protein, such as meat, milk and eggs," said Dr. Albrecht, "are the very products of reproduction. Proteins are nature's complex creations through which alone life can flow.

"When a soil loses its protein-making elements either through overcropping or erosion, it grows starchy, or woody plants, if any at all. While these foods are filling and may put on fat, they do not cause growth in animals or children."

Many of our farm soils are reaching the point where they are losing their ability to create, Dr. Albrecht said. When that happens, erosion is more rapid and serious.

Dr. Albrecht recommended a soil building program that adds nutrient elements through the use of fertilizers. This, he said, will result in more production and less erosion.

Great Clock of Strasbourg

One of the most unusual clocks in the world is the great clock in the Cathedral of Strasbourg, France. This clock not only tells the hour and the positions of the heavenly bodies, but also points to the day of the month, according to the World Book Encyclopedia. Below the dial which tells the time of day is a procession of gods and goddesses which show the days of the week. Quarter hours are struck by figures on the clock, one of which turns an hourglass. At noon each day a procession of the apostles [illegible] above crows three times.

Views on Comuunism

What are we fighting for in Korea? I asked myself that question shortly after my boy enlisted in the Air Force, as many other parents must have asked themselves. The answer is, of course, we're fighting communism over there, but who is fighting on the home front? The last time, the communist party was allowed to vote, we had about 80,000 cast their votes for communism. These 80,000 and perhaps more by this time, are still with us, although now they are forced to call themselves by a different name but they stand for the same thing.

I go on to say, "What is communism?" I have read a great deal about it, talked to different people and even heard a preacher explain it, who came directly from Russia, and the answer seems to be, the government takes over all private property and private rights as well of course. What can we do as private citizens about the communism in America? Our greatest weapon is, knowing what they are for or against. No communist has any time for private ownership, or they are always in for taking over this or that fellows business. Here is one you are all familiar with. If the government would take over the railroads we would be in clover. The Middle west would get more box cars to move grain with because the government would build so many more box cars than the railroad is now doing. Now then, fellow citizens, stop and do your own thinking, the railroad has had many years of experience and if the material is made available, does it not stand to reason that the railroad company, who had the know-how could build them faster? Secondly, we would lose millions of dollars in taxes now paid by the railroad, almost enough to support our school system in the whole United States. How much taxes would the government pay? The answer is none. They may have to put their hand down in our pocketbook for a few more dollars, as you know the government has no pocketbook of its own. And men and women who work for the government like good pay, so I would say that, one, at least smells like a communist to me. How does it smell to you? The Bible tells us that a tree is known by its fruit and by their fruits ye shall know them, so remember, fellow citizens, if you own a home, 80 acres of land or more or a little store or shop or anything individually, and you pick up a paper and find someone slamming away at private business, they mean you, and if you don't own anything and you dont ever hope to, or care to, remember they can take something away from you too - - they can take away your freedom to quit your job, go fishing, or say what you like and last but not least, worship as you please.

Sincerely,
Patrick McCullough

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Nurse Carol and Stella Moore, pretending to be Dorinda LaCroix at the insistence of Edward Thorndyke, who is paying her for the role, return to the Thorndyke home after learning that Fay Thorndyke, Edward's cousin and in on the conspiracy, is dead and has left a note of confession and suicide. They go to the kitchen where Carol offers to pour a cocktail for Stella. Just as Stella is about to take the drink, Sheriff Poole enters with Cleve Adams. At the same time he announces that he has come to arrest the murderer of Anne Delahay. He explains how the killer's schemes were developed and that Stella was to be next. The case is on the verge of solution. Stella is startled by Poole's words.

CHAPTER XXI

"It seems that Carol had been indulging in a minor form of blackmail, threatening to expose some irregularity of which Miss Hastings had been guilty at the hospital if she wouldn't co-operate. Of course the woman had no inkling that there was any serious crime involved. I didn't ask her what she had done at the hospital—none of my business—but Carol had lost her alibi. She didn't get into Los Angeles until around eight o'clock the night Anne Delahay was killed.

"Miss Hastings, once she let loose, gave me quite a lot of information about her supposed girl friend. She had no love for the young lady. The most important thing so far as I was concerned was that Carol's half brother had a hamburger stand somewhere down this way. When I heard his name, I knew where he was and I thought the question of how she got back to Thorndyke House and away again was answered. She simply got off the train at the station stop half a mile away from her brother's eating place and he furnished transportation.

"It was the brother, of course, who made the telephone call which took Carrie and Greer away from the house the day of Anne's death. Carol had laid her plans carefully. She knew that Miss LaCroix was down at the beach practically every sunny afternoon. However, if she'd missed her that day, she could always try again. It seems she was in the habit of meeting Edward away from the house and on those occasions she wore a wig of yellow hair so no one catching a glimpse of her would recognize her. She wore it that day for the same reason. It was just luck that the grocery boy saw her."

Typed Signature Was Not by Fay

Poole stopped as if his story was finished. He glanced down at the watch strapped about his muscular wrist, seemed to calculate the time, put his feet on the floor, rustled the papers on his desk importantly and assumed an air of dismissal.

"Don't stall, Poole, you know that isn't all," Cleve ordered inflexibly.

"In any event, I couldn't have prevented what happened to Fay Thorndyke — it was murder, not suicide, as you know. I didn't get back here until late Friday night. I expected to present my evidence at the inquest Saturday and obtain an order for Carol's arrest. But Fay's death made it necessary to postpone the inquest.

"That fake suicide and confession didn't take me in for a minute. It was simply impossible. She couldn't have been the woman at The Silver Slipper—which wasn't mentioned in the note, by the way—or the woman who was seen in the road the day Anne Delahay died. Remember that woman was described as rather under medium height—about Miss Dorinda's size. Nobody could possibly describe Fay as anything but tall or mistake her, even though her face was hidden, for Miss LaCroix. And she had an ironclad alibi for the second murder.

"The note was entirely typewritten, even the signature. It was typed on Fay's typewriter but anyone could have written it. I fancied, and found out later I was right, that there'd been a switch in the mild sedative tablets Miss Thorndyke was accustomed to taking. Morphine tablets had been substituted, we know now, which were again changed for the harmless ones when the note was planted.

"Fay had to die because she knew of the impersonation. It's barely possible Edward could have persuaded her to keep quiet if he had married her. But she certainly would have told everything she knew once she discovered his alliance with Carol. Her death that night, coming as it did so soon after Dorinda's escape, served a double purpose. It got Fay out of the way and created a scapegoat, we were supposed to accept what the note said and forget the whole thing. But by now, the strain was telling on Carol; her set-up for Fay wasn't as careful as the others had been."

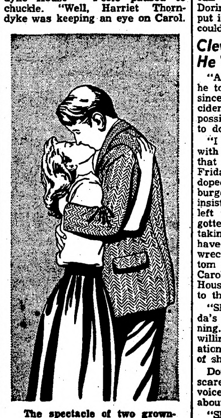
"But about that attempt on me," Dorinda broke in. "Fay was dead then—Carol couldn't have thought she'd get away with that. And how did you happen to be there just at the right time?"

Poole rubbed his hand over his chin without meeting Dorinda's eyes. "That wasn't just a happenstance. You see, I felt sure she'd make another immediate attack on you before you could tell things she didn't want told. I'll wager she found out you'd kept quiet about this Dorinda LaCroix stuff, didn't she?"

Dorinda nodded.

"I thought so. We didn't know what she planned to do but whatever it was we wanted to catch her in the act. That suicide note of Miss Thorndyke's complicated things. In spite of hell and high water, a good defending attorney might make a jury accept it. We arranged to give her a little rope and sure enough she tangled herself up in it."

He added hastily, "Cleve's bawled me out for this. He didn't know until after we were hidden in the house what it was all about. But you weren't in danger for a minute. You remember the man on the motorcycle? He was one of our men and he was watching at your end of the line. And at Thorndyke House—" Poole paused to chuckle. "Well, Harriet Thorndyke was keeping an eye on Carol.



The spectacle of two grown-ups embracing in broad daylight.

Really, I ought to make that woman a deputy. She telephoned us the minute the nurse left the house and Hawley, Cleve, myself and a man from the District Attorney's office were concealed in the storeroom before you two got there.

"Fay was intended to be blamed for your death, too. We would have found a box of aspirin tablets impregnated with cyanide in your handbag which Carol would have conveniently remembered Miss Thorndyke giving you. You know, of course, that Carol dropped the poison in your glass while you were getting the ice cubes.

"And now, that's about all there is to tell, isn't it?"

Carol Planned Suicide Note for Dorinda, Too

"No, not nearly all. What about my dog and the attack on me in my room and who followed me to the attic that day? And weren't you ever suspicious of Lana? She wouldn't tell you where she was the day Anne died and she ran away."

Poole threw up his hands in mock despair. "Which question do you want answered first? Carol followed you to the attic, of course. She'd just come in from her walk and saw you open the door of the attic when she went upstairs.

"And your dog—if you'd drunk your milk that night, you'd have been found with a suicide note, too, the next morning, nervous breakdown from the experiences you'd gone through, no doubt. Carol switched tablets on you as she did on Fay later. She looked in your room that night to find you gone and your dog staggering around the floor. She took him out of there in a hurry. She had him hidden in her closet when you knocked on her door. I don't know what she did with his body later on.

"But she wanted the poison she'd left in your room. If you'd taken it after Carrie and the rest of the household knew about the dog's disappearance and the spilled milk, it might have looked too suspicious. Her first chance to get it came the next night when she and Edward got home ahead of you. And then you surprised her in there. She struck you to prevent you turning on the light. She didn't want to kill you then. It wasn't her idea to have you found the victim of an attack."

Poole looked at Dorinda, his eyes bright with amusement. "About Lana. I wasn't worried about her. In the first place, she was much too small to be the yellow-haired girl. The first thing which strikes you when you look at her is her tinyness. And I had a pretty good idea where she'd been. I happened to see her driving out of the Van Sillar place about dusk one evening. Van Sillar's official residence is Arizona. He was getting a divorce from his fourth wife and he didn't want her to get any hint that he had another woman ready to take her place.

"Of course, a lot of what I've told you, I didn't know at the time I arrested the nurse. But Cleve had been very helpful—he told me about the dog and the attack on you and about the impersonation."

"The impersonation? But—he didn't know—" Dorinda stared at Cleve, her mouth open a little.

"And as soon as Carol was arrested, Edward talked," Poole hurried on. "I think he'd grown to hate her and at the same time her very ruthlessness fascinated him. He was a wishful thinker. She never told him anything and he really tried to believe the things which happened were what they appeared to be. He was horrified when Taylor was killed—Taylor was lured to The Silver Slipper by a telephone call promising information about Dorinda, by the way—but Edward put it out of his mind as well as he could.

Cleve Tells Dorinda He Wants Her for Wife

"And when Anne Delahay died, he told us he felt an actual relief, since, if her death hadn't been accidental, he believed it was impossible that Carol had anything to do with it.

"I don't know what they'll do with him. After all, it's to his credit that he saved Dorinda's life that Friday night. She'd have been doped when she stopped at the hamburger stand and Carol would have insisted on her driving when they left there. The nurse would have gotten out when she saw the dope taking effect and Dorinda would have been discovered in her wrecked car somewhere at the bottom of the cliff next morning with Carol safe back at Thorndyke House. Brother would have seen to that.

"She was determined on Dorinda's death from the very beginning. Whether Miss LaCroix was willing to continue the impersonation or not, she had no intention of sharing the money."

Dorinda shivered. "I'm still scared," she admitted in a small voice. "Did—did she say anything about Grandmother?"

"She wouldn't comment on that, even though she spilled the beans quite thoroughly after she found out Edward had talked—she even seemed a little proud of her planning. We'll probably never know the exact truth—but I think there's no doubt Mrs. Thorndyke died of a heart attack, whatever may have brought it on.

"And now I think you curious people do know just about all there is to know, except—oh, yes, there was the lawyer. She had no intention of killing him but she'd had a drink with him in his room that morning and gave him something which made him sick enough to delay the reading of the will. She'd enjoyed a mild flirtation with him at the hospital the summer before so knew him well enough to make sneaking into his room for a drink plausible. Her prompt action prevented him from becoming too ill. Her nurse's bag was a regular storehouse of poisons. She must have been assembling them for years."

Poole stood up, shook down his trouser legs, stretched. "Maybe it does seem she left herself wide open in some ways. But she counted too heavily on her own cleverness and the prestige of the Thorndykes. She never figured that there would be any real investigation."

When Cleve and Dorinda came out into the open air again, the fog had lifted. Seagulls wheeled above them in the pale sunlight. Dorinda stopped short on the sidewalk. "Oh, I've just thought—who was it Carol heard whispering in the hall that night?"

Cleve laughed. "Idiot child. Is that the first time that occured to you? Nobody, of couse. It sounded fishy to me the first time I heard it. Imagine two conspirators meeting in such a place and whispering loud enough to be overheard."

They walked on down the quiet street together. Then Dorinda asked, her voice very low, "Did—did you know about me all the time?"

Cleve's eyes twinkled as he looked down at her. "Not all the time, honey. But Carrie told me after your dog disappeared. For some reason she thought you needed protection just because you weren't the real Dorinda."

"And it doesn't make any difference?"

"Hell, sweet, I'm in love with a girl, not a name."

Three wandering children and a mongrel dog stared at the spectacle of two grown-ups embracing in broad daylight.

"You won't be Dorinda LaCroix, romantic refugee from France," Cleve told her. "Just plain Stella Adams, housewife."

"That's all I want to be," she said contentedly.

She tucked her hand in his arm and they went on down the street.

Cut paper milk cartons lengthwise and use them for storing fish, meat or other produce in the refrigerator. They can be washed, drained and re-used.

• • •

When making muffins, have milk and eggs at room temperature for best results. This is especially important when melted shortening is used, because cold milk will solidify shortening.

• • •

Place gelatin salads in baking-powder cans for chilling and molding. Sliced in rings and served on shredded lettuce, such salads are both appetizing and attractive.

• • •

A grilled sandwich is welcome with cold accomplishments. Dip cheese sandwiches in a combination of beaten eggs, milk and salt, and brown on both sides in hot fat.

To successfully darn a woolen fabric of many colors, use a strand of each color of thread in the needle.

• • •

Starch burned on to the bottom of an iron can prove a nuisance in ironing. To clean a starch-stuck iron, let iron cool thoroughly, then rub bottom with a damp cloth sprinkled with baking soda. Soda cleans without scratching, is perfectly safe.

• • •

If a loaf of bread is in danger of molding, cut it in thin slices, place the slices in a pan and place in the oven. When dry, put through a food chopper, store in a closed container, and use for stuffing and puddings.

When baking meat loaf, place strips of bacon lengthwise in the bottom of the pan. This prevents sticking and also flavors the loaf.

A PRIZE WINNING RECIPE BEST WITH RED STAR Special Active DRY YEAST

PRUNE BRUNCH ROLLS

BAKE at 375° F. for 15 to 20 minutes. MAKES about 40 small rolls.

DISSOLVE 1 package active dry yeast (or 1 cake compressed yeast) in ¼ cup warm water (110° to 115° F.). COMBINE ¼ cup shortening, ⅓ cup sugar, 1½ teaspoons salt*, ¼ cup scalded milk. Cool to lukewarm. BLEND IN 1 beaten egg and the dissolved yeast. ADD 3 cups sifted Pillsbury's Best Enriched Flour*; mix until smooth. Place in greased bowl; cover. LET RISE in warm place (85° to 90° F.) until double in bulk, about 1 hour. ROLL dough on lightly floured board to ¼ inch thickness; cut into rounds with 2 inch cutter. Place on greased baking sheet. LET RISE in warm place until double in bulk, about 1 hour.

PRESS fingers in center of each round to form a tart shape. Spread a teaspoon of Prune Filling, and a teaspoon of Cheese Filling in each hollow. Sprinkle with chopped nuts. BAKE in moderate oven (375° F.) 15 to 20 minutes. PRUNE FILLING: Combine 1 cup chopped, cooked, pitted prunes, 2 teaspoons grated orange rind, 3 tablespoons sugar and ¼ teaspoon cinnamon. CHEESE FILLING: Combine 1 cup creamed cottage cheese, ¼ cup sugar and ½ teaspoon salt.

*If you use Pillsbury's Best Enriched Self-Rising Flour, omit salt. If you use compressed yeast, dissolve in lukewarm water.

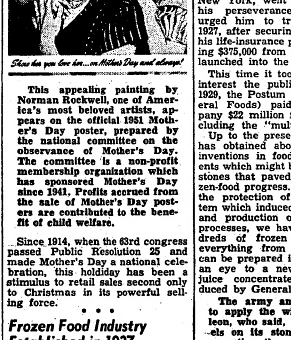
Mother's Day Is Big Stimulus To Main Street Retail Sales

Millions of Americans, from the home towns of the great midwest farm belt to the rocky shores of Maine, from the Pacific to the Atlantic, will express their love for mother on her day, Sunday, May 13. Millions of men, women and children will give expressions of love on this one day that reaches deep into the hearts of all people.

Because of the emotional force stemming from the meaning of Mother's Day it is the one time that the Main Street merchant can be of great benefit to his customers and friends. It is the one day he can feel free to give advice to husband, son and daughter on their purchase of a gift for mother.

Mother's Day offers one of the great focal points for complete store-wide merchandising in Main Street stores. What it means to each store is just what each makes it. It is easy for the wise merchant to create a dignified yet powerful environment that will bring people into his store to obtain tangible evidence of their love for mother on her day.



MOTHER'S DAY
MAY 13th
Show her you love her... on Mother's Day and always!

This appealing painting by Norman Rockwell, one of America's most beloved artists, appears on the official 1951 Mother's Day poster, prepared by the national committee on the observance of Mother's Day. The committee is a non-profit membership organization which has sponsored Mother's Day since 1941. Profits accrued from the sale of Mother's Day posters are contributed to the benefit of child welfare.

Since 1914, when the 63rd congress passed Public Resolution 25 and made Mother's Day a national celebration, this holdiday has been a stimulus to retail sales second only to Christmas in its powerful selling force.

Frozen Food Industry Established in 1927

Americans accept frozen foods today with the same nonchalance as they do automobiles and electricity. The small town housewife rushes out to her Main Street store at a moment's notice to pick up a package of frozen food when unexpected company arrives. Or she may have a supply stored in the local locker plant or in her own home freezer. In fact, frozen food has become such a big business in modern America that the industry is observing National Frozen Food Week, May 12-19.

The American housewife can thank practical Eskimos and a shrewd Yankee fur trader for being able to have seasonal fruits and vegetables "fresh" at any time of the year. And that shrewd Yankee opened a new industry to America.

The fur trader is Clarence Birdseye of Glouchester, Mass., who still indulges his fancy for adventure in the far north. While dealing with Arctic Eskimos up the Labrador coast during 1912, he was amazed at the excellent meat and fish they seemed always to have available. The secret was in the quick-freezing of game freshly caught. "Quick-Freeze!" That was the big idea he mulled over as he sailed home. Invent a special kind of freezing machine to freeze almost instantly, patent it, make fresh foods available to everyone!

Inspired by this thought, and stimulated by the hope of protection aforded by our patent system, he built his first crude machine which he called the "Multiplate Quick Freeze." This consisted of a new garbage can of corrugated iron with layers of steel plates between which codfish and rabbit meat were placed. It was supplies with coils that contained salt brine as a refrigerant.

Incredible, but true, this unpolished mechanism was the forerunner of our gigantic lockers of today. Encouraged by the success of his invention in food preservation, and the patent protection obtained thereon, Birdseye endeavored to promote his idea.

A skeptical America was not too eager to accept quick-frozen foods, and the inventor, in 1924, after making stabs in both Glouchester and New York, went broke. Unbeaten, his perseverance and ingenuity urged him to try again and, in 1927, after securing a $2,250 loan on his life-insurance policy, and obtaining $375,000 from backers, he again launched into the business.

This time it took only a year to interest the public sufficiently. In 1929, the Postum Co. (today's General Foods) paid Birdeye's company $22 million for his assets, including the "multiplate" patent.

Up to the present time, Birdseye has obtained about 20 patents on inventions in food processing—patents which might be called stepping-stones that paved the way for frozen-food progress. Today, thanks to the protection of our patent system which induced the development and production of those patented processes, we have access to hundreds of frozen foods, including everything from french-fries that can be prepared in the twinkling of an eye to a new frozen tomato-juice concentrate recently introduced by General Foods.

The army and navy—willing to apply the wisdom of Napoleon, who said, "An army travels on its stomach"—are fast accepting the convenience and excellence of frozen foods, For the busy farmer's wife, the "Deepfreeze," often sitting on the back porch, is nothing short of a gift from fairyland.

According to statistics furnished by Herbert Harris's recent survey, retail outlets consume 56% of all frozen foods processed, while restaurants, schools, hospitals, and other institutions use the remaining 44%. It has been predicted that by 1957, if the steady rise in the use of frozen foods continues as it has in the past, 50% of the money Americans spend for food will go for frozen foods.

National Patent Council brings to mind the fact that without the competitive incentive and protection assured inventors by our U.S. patent system, the health-promoting luxury afforded through the use of frozen foods might still be realized only by the Eskimos. This prodigous industry is just another symbol of our American way of life—a way that we all must cherish and preserve.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

U.S. Church Membership Grows 51.5 Per Cent in Past 23 Years

The rate of increase in American church membership since 1926 has been more than 20 per cent greater than population growth, a recent survey made by the National Council of Churches revealed.

The survey covered the period between 1926, the date of the last adequate federal census of religious groups, and 1949. It showed church membership increased 51.5 per cent while population grew by an estimated 30 per cent.

Described as the first of its kind in a number of years, the survey tabulated the membership of 54 religious bodies, all with membership over 50,000. Combined, these groups account for about 97 per cent of church membership.

Of the three major faiths Protestantism showed the largest percentage gain adding 16,954,322 new members for a 56 per cent growth. During the same period the number of Roman Catholics increased by 9,005,305 for a 48.4 per cent increase, and the Jewish congregations 918,758 for a 22.5 per cent rise.

Total membership of the religious bodies, which included a number of Eastern Orthodox churches, rose from 53,230,413 in 1926 to 80,682,575 in 1949, the survey reported.

Smaller Sects Show Greatest Increase

Dr. Benson Y. Landis, associate director of the council's department of research and survey, said that "American church membership is at an all-time high, not only in terms of actual numbers but in proportion to the population. However, there were also more people not on the church rolls than ever before.

He reported the ratio of church membership to population had risen steadily from 5 per cent in 1780 to 15 per cent in 1850, and from 35 per cent at the turn of the century to 50 per cent in 1940, and over 54 per cent in 1949.

One of the interesting facts demonstrated by the survey was the far greater percentage growth in the smaller sects and denominations. These groups, which averaged higher than the norm, are "characterized by an intense evangelistic spirit and generally teach the second coming of Christ."

Certain Stains Won't Bleach

Although sunshine is one of the best and safest bleaches for white clothes after laundering, and even though it often fades colors, it may have just the opposite effect on some common stains. Margaret Furry, textile chemist of the U. S. Deparment of Agriculture, has issued a warning along this line:

"The heat of strong summer sun may set and darken stains containing tannin, such as those from cherries, peaches, pears, plums, soft drinks or the mustard served on hot dogs or ham. Play clothes, sunsuits, house dresses or aprons, even bathing suits worn at beach picnics, may be permanently marked by leaving these stains exposed to the sun."

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

• Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT'S action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon... right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

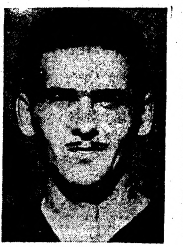
HADACOL HELPS MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Suffering Stomach Distress, Aches and Pains, Weak, Run-down Conditions and Nervousness When Due To Deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron

Mrs. Anna Lavergne, Church Point, Louisiana: "You don't know how wonderful it feels to be in such good condition—after feeling run-down. I had a very poor appetite—in fact, food didn't agree with me at all. I had a hard time sleeping nights . . . sometimes I would stay awake until one or two in the morning and then the next day I would feel tired and groggy all day long. You have no idea how terrible I felt. Now all this is gone . . . yes, now that I have been taking HADACOL, I feel wonderful. I get lots of good, sound sleep, have a fine appetite and just lots of energy. I can eat any kind of food now and it doesn't bother me a bit. I just can't begin to thank HADACOL."

F. W. Horton, 108 74th Ave., Houston, Texas, says about his little son: "Lee was very weak and run-down and just didn't want to eat at all. We heard about HADACOL and decided that was what Lee needed. After he started taking HADACOL his appetite picked up right away. He started gaining weight and eats real well now, and has been feeling real good. HADACOL has been good for Lee and I heartily recommend it to everyone."

HADACOL has helped many children suffering weak, run-down conditions when due to deficiencies of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron. If your child is puny and run-down due to such deficiencies, HADACOL can help. HADACOL is recommended by many doctors.



Richard Krabill, 3118 Murfield Road, Toledo 14, Ohio: "I am an apprentice pharmacist and I go to the University of Toledo. Going to school and working until 9:30 gets pretty tiresome. I was getting tired and run-down keeping pace with all I had to do. Being married and having a family, I am compelled to work after school. I work in a pharmacy here in Toledo. After selling HADACOL here in the store, I decided I'd try it. You have no idea how much it has picked me up. I'm telling you truthfully, HADACOL is the answer to all my tiredness from sitting up late at night doing homework after I come home from work. Already I have won customers on HADACOL. I am 31 and a veteran of World War II."

HADACOL CAN HELP YOU . . .

. . . if your system lacks these essential elements, you will be amazed at the wonderful results HADACOL can bring you, as it has to thousands of other fine folks who suffered a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron, which HADACOL contains.

HADACOL is that wonderful new preparation—promising blessed relief for your indigestion, stomach disturbances, (gas, heartburn, sour "risings" after meals), as well as that general run-down condition, and annoying aches and pains, if due to a lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin in your system.

Don't go through life suffering with conditions caused by such deficiencies when relief may be as close at hand as the nearest drugstore for sufferers from these deficiencies. Buy HADACOL today. Trial size bottle only $1.25. Large family economy size, $3.50. Refuse substitutes. There's only one true and genuine HADACOL. Sold on a strict money-back guarantee—you'll feel great after the first few bottles you take or your money will be refunded. If your dealer does not sell HADACOL order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana.

Good Soil Management Will Help Pasture 'Feed Two Cows Where One Grazed Before'

Pasture is a cash crop that needs plant food for high yields.

CHICAGO—Making pastures "feed two cows where only one grazed before" can keep your dairying operations profitable in spite of rising costs. Good management, proper grazing practices, fertilization and renovation and reseeding where necessary will do this for you, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"Pasture is a cash crop, the same as any other crop grown on the farm," the statement points out. "It takes plant nutrients out of the soil, as do other crops.

"If you play fair with your pasture and give it good management and soil treatments, it will produce high yields at low cost and support a bigger cow population per acre. But if you follow a 'take-out' policy only, pasture yields decline and fewer cows can be fed, and you have a smaller milk output.

The committee quotes recent figures cited by Prof. Paul M. Burson of the University of Minnesota, as evidence of how steady grazing can drain off plant food.

"Over a 30 year period," says the statement, "an average herd of 20 cows producing 4,000 pounds of milk yearly during the pasturing period, will use up the equivalent of 53,000 pounds of ammonium sulphate, 18,000 pounds of 20 per cent superphosphate, 9,000 pounds of 50 per cent muriate of potash and 3 tons of lime.

Prof. Burson's figures represent fertility losses from milk production alone. They do not include nutrients used in building up the body of the animal which is eventually sold, nor elements lost from the soil in leaching and erosion."

Stressing the need for good pasture nutrition that replaces plant nutrients used in milk production, the committee points out that nitrogen is one of the essentials.

"Good stands of deep-rooted legumes such as alfalfa and sweet clover in the grass sod will supply necessary nitrogen," the statement says. "But the legumes need plenty of phosphate and potash for dense, leafy growth and a vigorous root system. Such a pasture can provide a cow with a full diet of succulent feed high in proteins, vitamins and minerals."

'Hear a Pin Drop'

The expression, "hear a pin drop," is derived from the method used in 17th century coffee house auctions, according to Kemper insurance historians. A pin was inserted an inch or so below the wick of a lighted candle, The highest bid when the pin fell secured a ship or other goods for sale.

In 1940, the last year before the war, the Netherlands East Indies supplied the world with 92 per cent of its pepper; 91 per cent of its quinine; 77 per cent of its kapok; 40 per cent of its rubber; 33 per cent of its fibers; 29 per cent of its cocoa; 20 per cent of its tin; 19 per cent of its tea; 5 per cent of its bauxite; 5 per cent of its sugar and 2½ per cent of its oil

Uncle Sam Says

Defense is everybody's job! The priceless privilege of being an American cannot be bought—it must be worked for and sacrificed for whether in uniform or right here at home. Your purchase of U. S. Defense Bonds helps build your own independent future but beyond that you express faith in your country. That is one practical and certain way to help keep our national economy stable and to stand with all Americans for peace and security. Enroll now for the Payroll Savings Plan where you work, or the Bond-A-Month Plan at your bank. U. S. Treasury Department

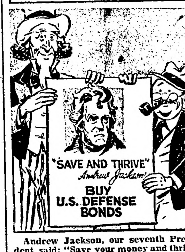
Uncle Sam Says



Andrew Jackson, our seventh President, said: "Save your money and thrive or pay the price in poverty and disgrace." Ten years ago millions of Americans started buying U. S. Defense Bonds. The money invested in those Bonds helped to finance the greatest war in history, and it helped finance the owners in carrying out many needed projects. Join the ranks of millions of wage earners who are providing security for their country and themselves by enrolling for the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. U. S. Treasury Department

Pasture is a cash crop that needs plant food for high yields.

CHICAGO—Making pastures "feed two cows where only one grazed before" can keep your dairying operations profitable in spite of rising costs. Good management, proper grazing practices, fertilization and renovation and reseeding where necessary will do this for you, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"Pasture is a cash crop, the same as any other crop grown on the farm," the statement points out. "It takes plant nutrients out of the soil, as do other crops.

"If you play fair with your pasture and give it good management and soil treatments, it will produce high yields at low cost and support a bigger cow population per acre. But if you follow a 'take-out' policy only, pasture yields decline and fewer cows can be fed, and you have a smaller milk output.

The committee quotes recent figures cited by Prof. Paul M. Burson of the University of Minnesota, as evidence of how steady grazing can drain off plant food.

"Over a 30 year period," says the statement, "an average herd of 20 cows producing 4,000 pounds of milk yearly during the pasturing period, will use up the equivalent of 53,000 pounds of ammonium sulphate, 18,000 pounds of 20 per cent superphosphate, 9,000 pounds of 50 per cent muriate of potash and 3 tons of lime.

Prof. Burson's figures represent fertility losses from milk production alone. They do not include nutrients used in building up the body of the animal which is eventually sold, nor elements lost from the soil in leaching and erosion."

Stressing the need for good pasture nutrition that replaces plant nutrients used in milk production, the committee points out that nitrogen is one of the essentials.

"Good stands of deep-rooted legumes such as alfalfa and sweet clover in the grass sod will supply necessary nitrogen," the statement says. "But the legumes need plenty of phosphate and potash for dense, leafy growth and a vigorous root system. Such a pasture can provide a cow with a full diet of succulent feed high in proteins, vitamins and minerals."

'Hear a Pin Drop'

The expression, "hear a pin drop," is derived from the method used in 17th century coffee house auctions, according to Kemper insurance historians. A pin was inserted an inch or so below the wick of a lighted candle. The highest bid when the pin fell secured a ship or other goods for sale.

In 1940, the last year before the war, the Netherlands East Indies supplied the world with 92 per cent of its pepper; 91 per cent of its quinine; 77 per cent of its kapok; 40 per cent of its rubber; 33 per cent of its fibers; 29 per cent of its cocoa; 20 per cent of its tin; 19 per cent of its tea; 5 per cent of its bauxite; 5 per cent of its sugar and 21 per cent of its oil

Climate of Jericho

Lying 800 feet and more below Mediterranean level, the garden acres of Jericho extend toward the Dead sea, lowest surface level on earth In summer Jericho is torrid, and waves of heat make the desolate white marl hills seem to dance a witch's waltz. In winter, when Jerusalem lies frozen under a blanket of snow, Jericho, near by and far below, is a sunshine paradise.

"We Get Fair Treatment From LAND O' LAKES"
says BEN A. KNEBEL,
Pequot Lakes, Minn., dairyman

Meet Ben Knebel, an owner-patron of the Cooperative Creamery Association, Pequot Lakes, Minnesota. And let him tell you why he deals with LAND O' LAKES. "I've found LAND O' LAKES to be a cooperative that operates one hundred per cent for the farmer. They treat us fair and square every time.

"And what's more, LAND O' LAKES saves its farmer-owners a lot of money. Not only by helping provide a more stable market and higher average butterfat returns, but fair prices on top quality feeds and seeds and all kinds of farm equipment and supplies. And best of all, they're square shooters, always."

So take a tip from Ben Knebel: If you sell milk, sell through LAND O' LAKES, where every farmer gets the same square deal.

Annular Eclipse

A certain type of eclipse of the sun is called an "annular" eclipse. In such an eclipse the moon appears to be slightly smaller than the sun, so that when the moon moves in front of the sun a narrow ring or "annulus" of light is visible around the moon. This is different than a total eclipse in which the moon completely covers the sun.

Reasons For Paint Failure

Too much oil causes paint to dry slowly, become dirty and fade. Too little oil causes it to wear off rapidly. Cracking is caused by hard, quick-drying paints. Wrinkles show up because of improper brushing of heavy, oily mixtures. Chalking usually comes about because too much thinner is used or by skimping on the number of coats.

45 Voters at School Election

Forests Renewable

A forest is not like a mine or an oil well. It does not consist of just so must material, which when taken away is gone forever. It is a replaceable resource. Forests are living, reproducing things. A forest that is not used is only a kind of storehouse. But with proper use, it becomes a sort of factory, constantly growing new supplies of wood.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

"One For The Book"

Miss Reynolds, our town librarian, really put a smart-aleck motorist in his place last week—right in center of town, corner of Main and Walnut.

Her car stalled, tying up traffic. Most drivers just waited quietly—realizing she couldn't help it—but one fellow kept blaring away on his horn.

So Miss Reynolds gets out of her car, walks over and says sweetly, "I'm afraid I can't start my engine. If you'd like to try I'll stay here and lean on that horn for you." That stopped him!

From where I sit, a lot of us are sometimes a little overeager to "sound off" before we really understand what it's all about. Let's try to see the other fellow's side in whatever he does — how he votes, what he thinks, whether his preference is for a glass of beer or buttermilk—rather than simply blast out anyone who "gets in the way" of our ideas in these matters.

Today's express terminals have much in common with Noah's Ark. Everything from goldfish to boa constrictors; from mice to elephants, including moose, buffalo, chimpanzees and armadillos may be housed there at some time.

New Insect Killer

Chemists have developed a new insect killer that destroys flies, mosquitoes, and other insects faster than DDT. It is claimed that the insecticide, marlate methoxychlor, is not dangerous to domestic animals and is safe for plants.

Hungarian Research

Hungarian physicists, using uranium and thorium found in the Velence Hill, are reported pursuing atomic research "on a large scale" at a place 30 miles southwest of Budapest.

National Parks

Visitors to national park areas, during the travel year ending September 1949, totaled 31,846,180, exceeding the 1948 figure by more than 2,000,000. Revenues reached a new high of $3,527,606.

Lincoln's Whiskers

Abraham Lincoln obviously recognized the dignity of going unshaven since he grew his famous beard in 1860, the year of his first presidential campaign.

Enduring Blue

It is believed by scientists that the blue seen on mummy cases, having lost nothing of its brightness, must be either ultramarine or cobalt.

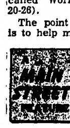
Main Street Businessman Has A Stake in World Trade Week

Rich man, poor man, beggar man, chief, doctor, lawyer merchant—, well, almost everyone stands to prosper from expanding world trade.

That's why the Chamber of Commerce of the United States undertook 17 years ago to sponsor on a national scale what had begun as a bright idea of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce back in 1927.

Every year now observances are held in home towns all over the United States during the week in May which includes National Maritime Day—May 22. The week is called World Trade Week (May 20-26).



The point of all these activities is to help more people realize that world trade is good for the world—and all the people that are a part of it. The activities of this week also point out the obstacles that are facing world trade and some of the steps that might help overcome them.

The very fact that our world today is suffering from international tension doesn't change the picture. It only shows that picture more clearly. If our country would remain strong and help to strengthen other free nations, it must take full advantage of the resources of all its trading area.

When you start out to look for someone who has a stake in world trade, you don't have to go to Wall Street or the docks along the water front. Just take a look down Main Street of any town in Oklahoma, Iowa or Kansas—or talk to a housewife in North Carolina — or stop at a ranch in Texas. These are the terminals of world trade—coming and going.

The port communities are way stations. They are mighty important and we couldn't get along without them, but the job of World Trade Week is to carry the story to the folks who never saw a steamship, much less an ocean bill of lading. The benefits of trade reach them. It's their baby, too!

World Trade Week is a local affair. If it's going to get anywhere it has to be a grassroots enterprise. That's why local bankers, civic clubs, farm organizations, and merchant organizations in cooperation with local newspapers will concentrate on World Trade Week as a means of telling the hometowner the importance of world trade and the "one world" of today.

Perhaps many home-towners don't realize it, but the local Chamber of Commerce works in close harmony with the U.S. Council of the International Chamber of Commerce. What the international council thinks of local business was expressed recently in a bulletin:

"Even if your business is as local as Main Street, what happens in foreign markets, what decisions restrict or encourage the flow of trade, what policies destroy or create world-wide financial security—all are of vital importance to you.

"For just as your business cannot prosper unless our national economy is prosperous, so our national prosperity depends upon a healthy world economy."

The Council also believes that American business today faces the necessity of doing three things:

1. Developing and by example spreading our system of free enterprise.
2. Establishing sound relations between our economy and those under government control.
3. Creating the stable world business conditions that will promote peace and insure an expanding economy.

The Council believes that decisions on international problems are of primary importance to "every American businessman." In this respect the council has reiterated a six-point program for business to foster a dynamic economy and to maintain a high level of employment in the nation and the world. These views are based on past policies of the organization.

1. Business should pursue a policy of vigorous enterprise in expanding production to serve human wants and aspirations and in keeping its activities healthy and profitable.
2. It should endeavor to preserve and develop vigorous and fair competition.
3. It should emphasize research for the discovery of new products and better methods and strive constantly to improve the productivity of those who toil.
4. As higher productivity permits, it should pass on a substantial part of the gain in the form of higher wages and lower prices.
5. It should cultivate by adequate training the potentialities and abilities of its employees and its management.
6. It should employ practices that help to moderate economic fluctuations and thus foster economic stability. Realizing its obligations to ensure to the utmost of its ability regular and satisfactory employment, it should explore every possible way of achieving this end; thus, for example, it should hold over to periods of low market demand more of its postponable expenditures for maintenance and improvements.

Philip D. Reed, chairman of the U.S. associates of the International Chamber of Commerce, expresses the view of most American businessmen, from the Main Street level to the highest: "This certainly is not a time when American business can sit back and await foreign developments. Artful disciples of other economic systems are aggressive. It seems to me that we who have faith in our system of competitive capitalism should be equally eager in letting the world know of its accomplishments and requirements."

U.S. Pickle Industry Promotes 'Pickle Week'

More than 200 pickle packers from coast to coast attended the winter meeting of the National Pickle Packers Association last February at Chicago's Sheraton Hotel to plan for the industry's third annual National Pickle Week (May 17-26).

As a result, the industry is making an all-out effort to promote their product, despite the fact that certain varieties of pickles are in short supply this year.

A fondness for pickles has always been a national characteristic of the American people.

Pickles inspired Thomas Jefferson to write: "On a hot day in Virginia, I know of nothing more comforting than a fine spiced pickle, brought up troutlike from the sparkling depths of that aromatic jar below stairs in Aunt Sally's cellar."

But the pickle was a well-established American custom long before the revolution. Colonial correspondence preserved from the year 1634 shows that a major purpose of the early settlers' kitchen gardens was to provide pickles. And pickles were highly regarded by all of the pioneering generations because, under frontier conditions, pickles were the only juicy, green food available for many months of the year.

The National Pickle Packers Association has distributed a colorful point-of-sale merchandising material for National Pickle Week which the home town housewife will be seeing in her local grocery store. An 11x17 poster in three colors features an animated pickle pointing out that "Pickles Make Good Food!" A unique shelf talker in the shape of a pickle is also included in the merchandising material.

Sunday, May 20, Is I Am an American Day

President Truman has designated Sunday, May 20, for the 1951 observance of "I Am An American Day."

In a proclamation issued by the White House, Mr. Truman set aside the day "as a public occasion for the recognition, and commemoration of U.S. citizenship."

"In this tense period of world history our nation must strengthen its unity of purpose through increased devotion to the fundamental principles of individual liberty, equal opportunity and justice for all," he said.

The President urged "federal, state and local officials, as well as patriotic, civic, educational and other interested organizations, to arrange for appropriate ceremonies on or about May 20 in which all our people may join."

Mr. Truman said special recognition should be given to "those of our youth who have attained their majority and of those foreign born who have become citizens through naturalization during the past year."

V.F.W. Buddy Poppy Sale Is Planned

From May 20 until Memorial Day, May 30, the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States will conduct their annual Buddy Poppy Sale.

Each Buddy Poppy is guaranteed by a copyrighted green label which identifies it as the genuine handiwork of a disabled and needy ex-service man. All sale proceeds are used for welfare and rehabilitation:

1. To provide a wide range of veteran welfare work.
2. To carry on a nationwide service and rehabilitation program through the national and state organizations.
3. To help maintain the V.F.W. national home for war orphans and widows.
4. To compensate the hospitalized veterans who make the Buddy Poppies.

The sale will be conducted in every community in the nation. It is well worth your 10 cents.

Says New Dry Yeast gives prize-winning results

Wins 6 Prizes in Cooking Competitions at 1950 North Dakota State Fair

Mrs. A. P. McDonell of Minot, North Dakota, tells daughter Patricia about her success at the State Fair. In 1950 she took 3 first prizes and 3 seconds for her food entries. It's getting to be an old story for Mrs. McDonell . . . she's been winning awards there for 14 years now.

And she's another of the prize-winning cooks who prefer Fleischmann's New Improved Active Dry Yeast. "It works so fast and gives me such wonderful results," she says. "This New Dry Yeast is a prize-winner with me!"

When you bake at home—use yeast—Fleischmann's New Improved Active Dry Yeast. It's the best ever . . . easier to use, faster dissolving. Buy a supply soon—serve delicious yeast-raised treats often!

CHAPTER I

The dust-streaked train ground to a reluctant halt, an angry squeal of brake shoes hinting that this stop at Caliente Junction was something beneath the dignity of the Southwestern Express. Usually the train only slowed a little and tossed off a mail sack. A brakeman swung down to the dirt platform, extending a helping hand to a passenger, while from one of the Pullmans a colored porter descended with a burden of smart luggage. Somewhat less ceremoniously a tall man in worn range clothing emerged from the door of the forward baggage car, shouldering a well-rubbed saddle and a neatly lashed blanket roll before even turning to gaze at the bleak outlines of Caliente Junction.

He was more than just a tall man; he was big. Standing a couple of inches over the six-foot mark he carried his weight easily on a heavy frame that was notable for its breadth of shoulder, achieving a look of hard fitness which marked him as a man who might hold his own in any company.

Frazer's attention shifted to the man who had followed the brakeman to the platform. There was something oddly familiar about that carefully garbed gentleman and Frazer always made it his business to check hunches of the sort. The practice usually paid off.

Frazer Sees Helen For the First Time

He stood motionless, watching, but could not quite place the man, even though the hint of memory persisted. The new arrival was a short, stocky fellow of perhaps fifty years of age, astonishingly neat for a person who had just crossed the desert in a day coach.

Frazer took a dozen long strides forward, almost tripping over the mail bag which had been tossed to the ground from the express car. He contrived to pick it up with his free hand by doing a deep knee bend, thus managing to get his long body within reaching distance of the ground without disturbing the balance of the burdens on his shoulder. When he stood erect once more he realized that his performance had been witnessed by a person whom he had not previously seen. A strikingly pretty girl had come down the steps from the Pullman and was standing beside a pile of baggage, a shade of amusement showing on her full lips as she watched his antics.

She was a tall girl, straight and erect without being angular, and Frazer gave her a quick grin of acknowledgement. It wasn't any trouble at all to smile at a girl like this one. Instantly she turned away, pretending that she had not seen his salute, but there had been plenty of time for him to make an inventory of her evident charm. She was fair of complexion, very blond and entirely attractive. Even at the distance he could see that she had dark eyes which seemed unusually large against her blondness, a fact which intrigued him even though he did not at the moment realize the similarity to his own striking features. Finally, and to his complete satisfaction, he realized that she was preparing to take the stagecoach to Mesa Verde. Maybe this job wasn't going to be an unmitigated headache after all.

The stage driver hailed her with every expression of surprised pleasure. "Howdy, Miss Helen," he greeted in a cracked tenor. "Didn't know ye was comin' home so soon. Yer pappy wasn't lookin' fer ye, yet, was he?" Without waiting for her to reply he asked another question, evidently making polite conversation without expecting much information in return. "How was everything back east?"

The girl smiled pleasantly. "Hello, Petey," she said, raising her voice enough so that Frazer understood that she was making allowances for an old man's deafness. "I thought it was time I came home. Is everything all right in Mesa Verde?"

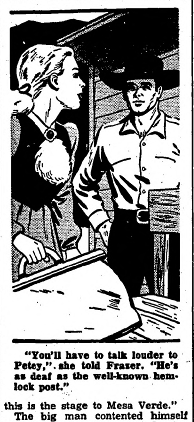
The old man's rounded shoulders hunched themselves in a gesture of amiable futility. "Dunno," he croaked. "Same as usual, I reckon. More trouble talk along the border. Nothin' ever happens, though."

Suddenly the driver seemed to remember his neglected mail pouch. He lowered the bags he was carrying and turned back hastily just as the long train groaned into motion. Frazer saw the move, interpreted the little man's anxiety, and held the mail bag out toward him. "This what you was lookin' for, Pop?" he inquired in a slow, lazy drawl that seemed to blend well with the worn clothing and the tanned countenance.

Between his own deafness and the noise of the moving train the driver seemed to miss the words. He snatched the bag hastily, glowering at Frazer, "Got no business handlin' gov'mint proputy!" he growled. "Some folks gotta learn to keep their paws offa things."

"You're welcome," Frazer said politely. "Is this the stagecoach to Mesa Verde?"

The girl smiled at his whimsy and Frazer decided that she was even prettier than he had at first realized. There was a little dimple which appeared fleetingly in one cheek and the dark eyes showed intelligence and humor as well as beauty. Even the honey-colored hair seemed to take on an added vivacity as the sun picked out a coppery sheen in it. "You'll have to talk louder to Petey," she told Frazer. "He's as deaf as the well-known hemlock post. However, this is the stage to Mesa Verde."



"You'll have to talk louder to Petey," she told Frazer. "He's as deaf as the well-known hemlock post."

The big man contented himself with a smiling "Thanks." Having tricked her into speaking to him he decided against pushing his luck too far.

The pompous man accosted them then and the girl assured him that this was the only way to reach the little mining town of Mesa Verde. He did not seem too pleased at the information, but he made no protest. There was a general bustle of preparation as the luggage was stowed and the three passengers climbed into the rickety old coach. The driver had lost his acerbity as quickly as he had found it and was grinning happily, quite pleased at having passengers on a run which had been getting very dull. He even grinned placatingly at Frazer as he sputtered some meaningless phrases which seemed calculated to soothe the nerves of his clients.

Stage Begins Journey From Caliente Junction

"Ain't a long ride, gents. Soon be there. Soon git ye home, Miss Helen. Here we go." Then he climbed to his high seat and the conveyance lurched into protesting motion as the four sleepy horses displayed unexpected signs of life.

The trio of passengers maintained complete silence as the squeaking old vehicle was hauled up the rocky grade which led out of Caliente Junction to the south. There was little to see along the rugged trail and less to talk about, only the granite pinnacles of the barren heights and a few struggling mesquite bushes.

Caliente Junction was a full hour behind them when the coach neared the summit of the rugged divide which separated the southern valleys from the rest of the territory. Then the older man broke the hot, flat silence with a courteous question, wiping his white brow with a fine linen handkerchief as he asked, "How much farther is it to Mesa Verde?" The question was addressed to the girl, indicating that he had spotted her as one who knew the country.

She answered promptly enough. "Only another five miles or so. We'll make better time from here on. It's mostly downhill after this."

"Rugged country, isn't it?" he observed with a show of rueful geniality. "I didn't realize that the town was so far from the railroad."

Her smile displayed white, even teeth. "That's rather a tender subject with us," she admitted. "Our mining people are trying to get a rail line, but the railroad company isn't ready to admit that we're so important. It hurts our pride, but deep down inside we know we're just a mining camp. For all practical purposes we're scarcely in the United States."

The man looked out at the desolate rock ramparts which flanked the pass. "I should think this stagecoach connection with the railroad would be dangerous. The country is pretty wild. Don't you have a lot of highway robbery?"

"Not for a long time has there been anything of the sort," she assured him. "I don't believe they've even carried a shotgun guard on the coach for the past two years. The mine companies run their own wagon trains, bringing the ore out and supplies in. It leaves the stage as pretty poor picking for bandits."

The older man pursued the banditry subject. "Then you feel that there is little outlawry around here?" He was putting on the pompous act again, twiddling his massive watch chain as he spoke. "I should have expected a certain amount in a relatively new mining area."

The girl shook her head. "There's trouble enough, I'm afraid. But it's mostly along the border south of the town. Mining operations have extended into Mexico, and there's always the danger of bandit raids there. The mine wagons are pretty closely guarded all the time. I was talking about this stage line when I said what I did."

"I see." He was expansively genial now, his act only a trifle overdone. "It's comforting to know that we're safe."

Bandits Halt Stage, Rob the Passengers

The remark was immediately contradicted in startling fashion. A gunshot boomed from somewhere close at hand and the stage lurched to a jarring halt. Hoofbeats sounded on the rocky trail, the driver's voice shrilled in a string of angry curses, and a heavy voice commanded, "Git yore paws up, driver. Don't try to reach for that cannon, either. You folks inside come out quiet—and without no guns."

From a little distance a second man was shouting loudly at the irate driver, although it did not seem that the little man was making any pretense of resistance. Frazer had time to think that the bandit must know about the driver's deafness, then he was heaving his long body forward to shove the door open.

A single glance permitted him to file a mental picture of the highwayman. Behind the menacing muzzle of the six-gun was a big man who sat his wiry pinto with complete assurance. He was not quite as big as Frazer, but his weight was more compactly distributed. Two hundred pounds, Frazer estimated. Maybe an inch under six feet. Sandy hair, clean shaven. The black mask concealed his other features.

"Lady on board," Frazer told him amiably. "Watch yore language. Ain't none of us totin' a gun or any amount o' cash."

The effect on the bandit was surprising. The man had seemed to falter at sight of Frazer, but mention of the lady passenger brought an astonishing result. The fellow's voice became a thick grunt as he backed the pinto away from the coach. "Everybody out. Line up. Stand quiet." The commands were brusque, but the man had lost some of his assurance. Something in what he had found here had disconcerted him.

He kept his gun steady, however, until the three passengers were lined up along the trail, then he backed cautiously over to where his partner was threatening the still vociferous driver. The pair conferred in whispers for a few moments, then exchanged places, the smaller man coming across to wave a gun at the trio beside the coach. He was small, dark, notably hairy on his arms and chest—and left-handed.

"Turn out yore pockets, gents," he snapped, his voice a rasping, nasal tenor. "And make sure nothin' comes out but valuables. My trigger finger's kinda itchy today."

The older man produced a wallet and his gold watch as the bandit advanced cautiously to snatch them from his hands. The watch went into a pocket but he kept the wallet in his right hand, glancing at it hastily before barking an order at Frazer, "Come on, big fella. Shell out!"

"Not much outa me," Frazer told him ruefully. "Two dollars and six bits is all I've got left after buyin' the ticket for them danged steam cars and this here ride."

Bismarck Fray Is Described

INDIRECTLY, Herman Goering was responsible for the destruction of the German battleship, Bismarck, it has been revealed.

Rear Admiral D. V. Gallery, U.S.N., recently cited the reluctance—or refusal—of the Luftwaffe to come to the aid of the German battleship as one of the factors that led to her sinking by the British on May 21, 1941.

At the same time, Admiral Gallery, who interrogated survivors of the ill-fated dreadnaught, points out that the entire battle was virtually a comedy of errors on both sides, with luck and British miscues favoring the Nazis. The latter pulled several boners themselves, Gallery states

"The Nazis committed a fatal blunder at the beginning. Concern with the fuel supplies completely dominated the plans of the admirals on both sides. Nevertheless, the Bismarck sailed from Norway 2,000 tons short of her full-capacity of fuel!"

A serio-comic touch was lent to the entire "Battle of Blunders", the Admiral states, when the Germans, without radar of their own, kept accurate track of the British ships stalking the Bismarck by means of excellent listening devices. The British employed radar for the same purpose. As a result of the tracking, each navy jumped to the conclusion that the other had stolen its technical secrets.

Admiral Gallery reveals that the British might have sent a boarding party aboard the floundering Bismarck but failed to do so. "She was a pushover to board, there was little to lose in trying, and there was a glorious page in naval history to gain, if the attempt succeeded." Had the Bismarck geen towed to port, it would have given the greatest boost of the war to British morale

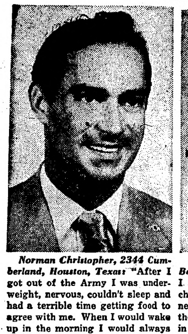
3 Reasons Why HADACOL IS PRAISED BY THOUSANDS

HADACOL brings relief to folks troubled with Stomach Distress, Weak, Run-Down Conditions and Nervousness when due to deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron



Norman Christopher, 2344 Cumberland, Houston, Texas: "After I got out of the Army I was underweight, nervous, couldn't sleep and had a terrible time getting food to agree with me. When I would wake up in the morning I would always be sick at my stomach — I could never eat breakfast—imagine having to wait until noon before eating the first meal of the day. Even then just a few mouthfuls of food would fill me up. At night I couldn't sleep—I would just roll and toss all night. After the third bottle of HADACOL I could tell a difference in my eating and sleeping habits. Now after a year's time of taking HADACOL, I have gained almost 20 pounds. I sleep well—and the most wonderful thing—I can enjoy three full meals a day."

Mrs. John A. Feight, Jr., Rt. 1, Bedford, Pennsylvania: "Anything I ate made my stomach ache and churn all night. . . . My food never seemed to get digested and therefore I would wake frequently in the night with pains. I would be nervous and think over the day's nerve-racking experiences. Every little thing irritated me. I couldn't stand children around me. They made me nervous. I would holler at my two-year-old daughter, Vickie, for nothing at all. Since taking HADACOL all my nausea and nervousness have passed away. All I can say for HADACOL is that it's made me see that this is a beautiful world after all. I'm 20 years old and am a housewife. I really do feel as great as I look on the photograph."

Mrs. Maurice Bellard, P. O. Box 226, Church Point, Louisiana, says about her son, Archie Bellard: "Some friends of mine have been taking HADACOL and found that it had done them a lot of good, and they suggested that I start giving HADACOL to my 16-year-old son Archie Bellard. He has been taking HADACOL for about two months, and since taking it he feels much better. Before he started taking HADACOL he felt weak, and was rundown, and he didn't feel like playing or working. Since he is taking HADACOL he has more energy, and he has a good appetite. I owe the friends, who suggested HADACOL to me, many thanks, but I owe HADACOL many more thanks, and since it has done Archie so much good, I will never be without it again."

HADACOL CAN HELP YOU!

Senator Dudley J. LeBlanc
Creator of Today's Great HADACOL

If your system is lacking in Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron, HADACOL can help you as it has helped thousands of other fine folks who had deficiencies of these important elements, which HADACOL contains.

HADACOL brings blessed relief to folks troubled with aches and pains, stomach disturbances (indigestion, gas, heartburn, "sour risings" after meals, bloating), a weak, rundown condition, poor appetite and nervousness when these troubles are due to a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron.

Don't go through life plagued with conditions caused by such deficiencies when relief may be as close at hand as the nearest drugstore for folks with these deficiencies. Buy HADACOL today. Trial size bottle, only $1.25. Large family economy size, $3.50. There's only one true and genuine HADACOL. Refuse substitutes. Sold on a strict money-back guarantee—you'll feel great after the first few bottles you take or your money will be refunded. If your dealer does not sell HADACOL order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana.

LOST BY A HARE!

Lots of us would bet on the hare, if we hadn't already heard the story.

On the surface, socialism looks like a winner, too, until you dig out the facts. As an example: Since 1923 the government has taken ownership of 150 private power companies. And -- since government property is tax exempt — the government lost over 125 million dollars in taxes as a result.

Socialism is a quick short-cut to your pocket-book! If you want to stop this constantly growing threat, line up now against government in business -- against government in any business, whether it's yours or the other fellow's.

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

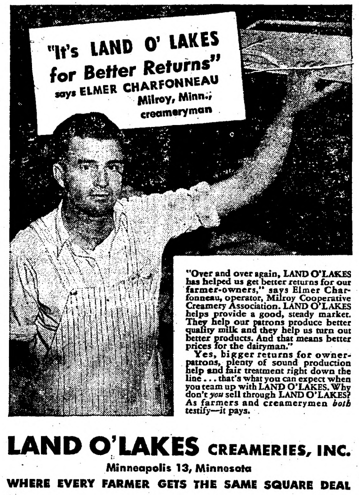
Climate of Jericho

Lying 800 feet and more below Mediterranean level, the garden acres of Jericho extend toward the Dead sea, lowest surface level on earth In summer Jericho is torrid, and waves of heat make the desolate white marl hills seem to dance a witch's waltz. In winter, when Jerusalem lies frozen under a blanket of snow, Jericho, near by and far below, is a sunshine paradise.



"Over and over again, LAND O'LAKES has helped us get better returns for our farmer-owners," says Elmer Charfonneau, operator, Milroy Cooperative Creamery Association. LAND O'LAKES helps provide a good, steady market. They help our patrons produce better quality milk and they help us turn out better products. And that means better prices for the dairyman."

Yes, bigger returns for owner-patrons, plenty of sound production help and fair treatment right down the line . . . that's what you can expect when you team up with LAND O'LAKES. Why don't you sell through LAND O'LAKES? As farmers and creamerymen both testify—it pays.

8 Hours More Leisure Weekly Using Rural Electric Power . . .

Mrs. Andy Morkassel, who lives just 3 miles east of Warren, Minnesota, likes lots of time to garden, visit and shop.
"That's why my electric range comes in so handy," she says. "My family likes oven meals . . . and I like to garden. I just put a complete meal in the oven before I leave, set the dials, and do whatever I like for the rest of the afternoon."
Using her electric range to full advantage, Mrs. Morkassel feels she saves 8 hours of time every week. "When I return home the dinner is ready. All I need to do is whip up a salad and set the table."
The Morkassels are members of the P. K. M. Electric Cooperative and have had rural electric power since 1948. Mrs. Morkassel has been using her electric range for about a year.
"I'd certainly hate to go back to cooking with kerosene now," she adds, as she prepares to "set the dials" on another of her favorite oven meals.
This is an excellent example of how you can help yourself to extra leisure time for things you've been wanting to do. An electric range is just one of many, many appliances which help you save time, labor and money. Why not create some extra leisure time for yourself? Go visiting . . . or shopping . . . or gardening. See your local electric dealer today about your new electric range.

Gallon of Milk

One dairyman found that it took from 340 to 350 squirts to "take" a gallon of milk from his cows.

Make Memorial Day Safe

"Make Memorial Day a day of rest and dedication to the war dead - - not a day of tragedy" tis the plea of A. V. Rohweder of Duluth, president of the Minnesota Safety Council.

"Every year". he said, "highway safety men prepare themselves for many needless traffic fatalities which desecrate this holiday, set apart to pay homage to the men and women who have given their lives that we might live in peace and safety. It is ironic that the observance of this day should catapult so many motorists to untimely deaths on our streets and highways.

"Last year four people were killed in two accidents and 63 others injured in 42 non-fatal accidents on Memorial Day. For the four-day holiday week'end, the toll was seven dead and 298 injured.

"Hazards in holiday travel can be avoided by sensible precautions. Avoid. when possible, heavily congested highways by taking alternate routes. Allow yourself sufficient time to reach your destination without having to speed or take needless chances. Check your car to see that it is in safe operating condition.

Above all, take it easy.

Don't mix drinking and driving

Don't pass on hills or curves.

Drive as if your very life depended on your driving - it does.

Most holiday fatalities and accidents occur in rural areas of the state, where the combination of high speeds and unusually heavy traffic combine to make a lethal mixture which often results in tragedy, City drivers, who can operate their cars safely in heavy slower-moving urban traffic, are too often involved in rural accidents because they fail to make the proper allowances for themsrlves and for other motorists.

"When the morning of May 31st rolls around," concluded Mr. Rohweder, "be alive and well even if you must learn with regret about other people's unfortunate mishaps."

Auto Chief Risk

In answer to the question: "What is the greatest risk in flying today?" student aviators at Orlando, Fla., reply: "The auto ride to the airport."

Pressure Canner

If a pressure canner is not exhausted for 10 minutes, air will be left in the canner, causing an air pocket over the jars. This will draw the liquid out of the jars.

The Minnesota legislature in 1951 session considered 3,285 proposals, passed 729 laws, and adopted 12 resolutions. Four ot the new laws, all dealing with appropiations, were the result of the brief special session following adjournment of the regular session under the time limiting law.

Complete text of these 741 laws and resolutions fill 63 8 colnmn newspaper pages while the index occupies another two-plus pages. All are contained in a 66-page publication issued in newspaper format by the State Department of Administration through State Printer Herman Myer, and distributed by the Minnesota Editorial Association through the newspapers of the state.

A copy is available free at this or any other newspaper office in Minnesota to anyone having special interest in the acts of our State Legislature.

Shortest measure is Chapter 524, requiring only eight lines of type to repeal a statutory salary provision; longest is Chapter 550 relating to non-profit corporations in 18 full columns. Chapter 174 has an 11-line heading on a two-line act repealing a police law.

Four amendments to the Constitutional Amendments, one with voting requirements, another with probate courts, and the fourth with distribution of the excise tax on motor vehicles.

Many new laws deal with changes in court terms, present election laws, wages and salaries wild animals and conservation, relief associations. All represent the best judgement of nearly 200 of the state's hardest working and most concientious citizens.

Mr. and Mrs. Gnnstenson and Gary spent Sunday at Erskine.

T. J. Lillevold of TRF spent Tuesday evening at the Bratteli home.
